F R E D E R I C K III.
King of P R U S S I A.

CHARLES FREDERICK III. the present Monarch of Prussia, equally famed for his literally and military Qualities, is the eldest Son of Frederick William, by Dorothea, Daughter of George the First, King of England. He was born on the 24th of January 1711; but of his Infant Years, nothing remarkable has been transmitted to us; the first Instance that rendered him remarkable, was his Disagreement with his Father, who was of a violent and arbitrary Disposition; his Views were narrow, and his Passions vehement; was earnestly engaged in little Pursuits, or in Schemes terminating in some speedy Consequence, without any Plan of lasting Advantage to himself or his Subjects, or any Prospect of distant Events. He was ~~therefore always busy though no Effects of his~~ Activity ever appeared, and always eager tho' he had nothing to gain. His Behaviour was to the last Degree rough and savage: The least Provocation, whether designed or accidental, was returned by Blows, which he did not always forbear, even to the Queen and Princesses.

It was therefore no enormous Violation of Duty in the Son and immediate Heir of a Kingdom to differ in Opinion from such a King and such a Father, and even sometimes to maintain that Difference with decent Pertinacity. A Prince of a quick and comprehensive Knowledge must find many Practices in the Conduct of Affairs which he could not approve, and some which it would be difficult not to oppose.

The old King's chief Pride was to be Master of the tallest Regiment in Europe, and accordingly collected from all Parts, Men above the common military Standard. To exceed the Height of six Feet was a certain Recommendation to Notice, and to approach that of seven a Claim to Distinction. Men will readily go where they are sure of being carested, and accordingly he had such a Collection of Giants as was perhaps never before seen in any Part of the World.

To review this towering Regiment was his daily Pleasure, and he was so desirous of perpetuating it, that whenever he met a tall Woman, man, he immediately commanded one of his Giant Retinue to marry her, that they might propagate Men above the ordinary Standard, and become Heirs to their Father's Accoutrements.

There was however no Crime in taking Care of this tall Regiment, who made a fine Shew at an Expence not much greater, when once collected, than would have been bestowed upon common Men. But the military Pastimes of the old King were often more pernicious. He maintained a numerous Army, of which he made no other Use than to review and to talk of it; and when he, or his Emissaries saw a Boy, whose Form and Sprightliness promised a future Soldier, he ordered a kind of Badge to be put about his Neck, by which he was marked out for the Service, like the Sons of Christian Captives in Turkey, and his Parents were not permitted to initiate him into any other Calling.

Though this was highly oppressive, it was not the utmost of his Tyranny. He had imbibed the Notion, that to be rich was to be powerful; but had not Reflection sufficient to teach him, that the Riches of a King should be apparent in the Opulence of his Subjects. He therefore raised exorbitant Taxes on every Kind of Commodity and Possession, and heap'd up Money in his Treasury, from whence it was never issued. How the Lands which had paid Taxes once was to pay it a second Time, how Imposts could be levied without Commerce, or Commerce carried on without Money, were Points which he never gave himself the Trouble to consider. Eager to snatch at Money and delighted to count it, he felt a new Pleasure at every Receipt, and thought himself enriched by the Impoverishment of his Dominions.

It is not easy to discover which of these particular Transactions gave Disgust to the Prince, or whether he was offended by some Particulars of a domestick Nature. But whatever was the Cause of his Resentment, it rose to such a Height, that he determined to leave both the Court and Territories of his Father, and seek an Asylum with some kindred Prince. It is the general Opinion that he intended to come to England, and live under the Protection of his Uncle, till his Father's Death or Change of Conduct, offered him an Opportunity to return.

But whatever his Design was, he concerted with an Officer of the Army whose Name was Kalte, a Person in whom he placed the most entire Confidence, and whom having chosen for the Companion of his Flight, he necessarily trusted with the preparatory Measures. It is impossible for a Prince to leave his Country with the Facility of a meaner Fugitive, something was to be provided, and something adjusted. And, whether Kalte found the Agency of others necessary, and consequently obliged to admit some Partners into the Secret; whether Levity or Vanity incited him to disburthen burthen himself of a Trust which swelled his Bosom, or magnify his Importance before a Friend or Mistress; this is certain, that the King discovered the Secret of the Prince's intended Flight, and both him and his Favourite, before the Time fixed for their Departure, were arrested and confined in different Places.

The Life of Princes is seldom in Danger, the Punishment of their Irregularities falls only on those whom Ambition or Affection combines with them. The King, after confining his Son for some Time, set him at Liberty; but poor Kalte was ordered to be tried for a capital Crime. The Court accordingly examined the Cause and acquitted him; the King commanded a second Trial, and forced his Judges to condemn him. In Consequence of which Sentence, thus tyrannically extorted, he was publicly beheaded, leaving behind him some Papers of Reflection, made in the Prison, which were afterwards printed, and among others, an Admonition to the Prince for whose Sake he suffered, not to harbour in himself an Opinion of Destiny, for that a Providence is discoverable in every Object around us.

This cruel Prosecution of a Man who had committed no Crime, but by Compliance with Influence not easily resisted, was not the only Act by which the old King irritated his Son. A Lady with whom the Prince was suspected of Intimacy, perhaps more than Virtue allows, was seized on some Pretence, and by the King's Order, notwithstanding all the Reasons of Decency and Tenderness that operate in other Countries and in other Judicatures, was publickly whipped in the Streets of Berlin.

At last, that the Prince might feel the Power of a King and a Father in its utmost Rigour, he was, in 1733, married against his Consent to the Princess Elizabetha Christiana of Brunswick Lunenburg Beveren. He indeed submitted to his Father's Command, by marrying her, but without professing for her either Esteem or Affection; and considering the Claim of parental Authority fully satisfied by the external Ceremony, obstinately, during the Life of his Father, kept from her Bed. Thus the unfortunate Princess lived about seven Years in the Court of Berlin, in a State not often seen, a Wife without a Husband, married so far as to engage her Person to a Man who did not desire her Affection, and of whom it was doubtful whether he thought himself restrained from the Power of Repudiation by an Act performed under evident Compulsion.

In this Manner the Prince lived secluded from publick Business, in Contention with his Father, in Alienation from his Wife. In this State of Uneasiness, he endeavoured to divert his Mind from the uneasy Scenes that surrounded him, by Studies and literary Amusements. The Studies of Princes seldom produce great Effects, for they draw with meaner Mortals, the Lot of Understanding; and since among many

many Students not more than one can be hoped to advance far towards Perfection, it is scarcely to be expected that we should find that one a Prince; that the Desire of Science should overpower in any Mind the Love of Pleasure, when it is always present or always within Call; that laborious Meditation should be preferred in the Days of Youth to Amusements and Festivity, and that Perseverance should press forward in Contempt of Flattery, and that he in whom moderate Acquisitions would be extolled as Prodigies, should exact from himself that Excellence, of which the whole World conspires to spare him the Necessity.

In every great Performance, perhaps, in every great Character, Part is the Gift of Nature, Part the Contribution of Accident, and Part the Effect of Assiduity and regular Design. The King of Prussia was undoubtedly born with more than common Abilities; and he has cultivated them with more than common Diligence, probably from the Effect of his peculiar Condition, which he then considered as cruel and unfortunate.

During this long Interval of Unhappiness and Obscurity he acquired a Skill in the mathematical Sciences that justly places him in the first Class; and his Skill in Poetry is sufficiently evident from the Specimens that have been transmitted to the Publick, and the Praises bestowed on them by Voltaire, a Judge without Exception. Musick he not only under-
A 5

derstands, but also composes and performs on the German Flute in the highest Perfection.

But besides these Advantages, he may be said to owe to the Difficulties of his Youth, another less frequently obtained by Princes than Literature and Mathematicks. The Necessity of passing his Time without Pomp, and of partaking of the Pleasures and Labours of a lower Station, made him acquainted with the various Forms of Life, and with the genuine Passions, Interests, Desires and Distresses of Mankind. Without this Help from temporary Infelicity, Kings see the World as it were in a Mist, which magnifies every Thing near them, and bounds their View to a narrow Compass, which few are able to extend by the mere Force of Curiosity.

Thus the King of Prussia brought to the Throne the Knowledge of a private Man; and of this general Acquaintance with the World may be found some Traces in his whole Life. His Conversation is like that of other Men upon common Topicks, his Letters have an Air of familiar Elegance, and his whole Conduct is that of a Man who has to do with Men, and who is not ignorant of the Motives that will prevail over Friends and Enemies.

In the Year 1740 the old King was taken ill, and perceiving his Distemper, notwithstanding all that the learned Physicians could prescribe, gained upon his Strength, grew at last

last sensible that his End was approaching. He therefore ordered the Prince to be called to his Bed-side, and laid several Injunctions on him, one of which was to perpetuate the tall Regiment by continual Recruits, and another to receive his Wife. The Prince gave him a respectful Answer, but wisely avoided to diminish his own Right or Power by an absolute Promise, and the King died without receiving any Certainty with Regard to the tall Regiment.

Immediately after the Death of the old King, Frederick III. ascended the Prussian Throne, with great Expectations, which he has however surpassed. His Father's Faults produced many Advantages to the first Years of his Reign. He had an Army of 70,000 Men well disciplined, without any Imputation of Severity to himself, and was Master of an immense Treasure, without either the Crime or Reproach of raising it.

The first Cares of every Man are always of a domestic Nature; and the King being now freed from all Restraint, determined to act towards the unhappy Lady who had possessed for seven Years the empty Title of Princess of Prussia, worthy of himself; and accordingly, in the Presence of his whole Court, received her as Queen.

Soon after his Resolution was known with Regard to the tall Regiment; for some Recruits being offered him, he rejected them; and this Body

Body of Giants, by being disregarded, mouldered away.

His filial Behaviour to his Mother was always remarkable; few private Men treat their Parents with so great Respect; for he never approached her covered, nor without the highest Expressions of Reverence. He ordered she should bear the Title of Queen Mother, and would never suffer her to address him as his Majesty, but always stile him Son.

The Good of his People also claimed his utmost Attention; and he shewed himself an Enemy to Tyranny wherever it appeared, for soon after his Ascension to the Throne, passing in his Coach from Potsdam to Berlin, a thousand Boys, who had been marked out for military Service, surrounded him, crying out, Merciful King deliver us from our Slavery. He promised them their Liberty, and the next Day ordered that the Badge should be taken off.

But his Care of the Government did not prevent his continuing to keep up that Correspondence with learned Men which he began when he was Prince, he even considerably enlarged it.

It soon appeared that he was determined to govern with very little ministerial Assistance; for he took Cognizance of every Thing with his own Eyes, declared that in all Disputes between him and his Subjects, the publick Good should have the Preference, and one of the first Exertions of his legal Power was to banish nish the prime Minister and Favourite of his Father, as one who had betrayed his Master and abused his Trust.

After this he declared his Resolution of granting a general Toleration of Religion, and that it was his Intention to support good Men, be their religious Tenets what they would.

There had for some Years subsisted an Order in Prussia, called the Order for Favour, and which, according to its Denomination had been conferred without any Regard to Merit. This the King considered as repugnant to the Nature of all Orders, and therefore constituted another, which he called the Order for Merit, with which he honoured those whom he considered as deserving it.

Nor was he unattentive to the Necessities of the Poor, ordering the Magistrates of the several Districts to be very careful to relieve their Wants, and if the Funds established for that Purpose were not sufficient, permitted them to make up the Defect out of the Revenues of the Town.

The Advancement of Learning was also one of his first Cares; in Order to which he prevailed on the celebrated Voltaire and Mau-pertuis to come to Berlin, and there establish an Academy on the same Plan as that of the Academy of Arts and Sciences at Paris.

But though he was very desirous of promoting the Sciences in his Dominions, he at the same Time demonstrated to the World, that literary Amusements would not withdraw him him from the Care of his Kingdom, or make him forget his Rights. His first Transaction of this Kind, was the reviving the Claim of his Ancestors on Herftal and Hermal, two Districts possessed by the Bishop of Liege. Accordingly he sent his Commissary to demand the Homage of the Inhabitants; but they refused him Admission, declaring that they would acknowledge no other Sovereign but the Bishop. On this Refusal the King wrote a Letter to the Bishop, in which he complained of the Violation of his Right, and the Contempt of his Authority; charged the Prelate with countenancing the late Act of Disobedience, and required an Answer in two Days,

The Bishop returned an Answer in three Days, in which the Prelate founded his Claim to these two Lordships, on a grant of Charles V. guaranteed by France and Spain; alledged that his Predecessors had enjoyed this Grant above a Century, and that he never intended to infringe the Rights of Prussia; but as the House of Brandenburg had always claimed that Territory, he was willing to do what other Bishops had offered, to purchase that Claim for an hundred thousand Crowns.

This his Prussian Majesty absolutely refused, and after publishing a Declaration in which he charged the Bishop with Violence and Injustice, and remarked that the feudal Laws allowed every Man an armed Force, he immediately dispatched two thousand Soldiers into the controverted Countries; where they lived at Discre-

Discretion, exercising every kind of military Tyranny, till the Cries of the Inhabitants forced the Bishop to relinquish the Lordships to the quiet Government of Prussia.

This however was but a petty Acquisition, the Time was now come when the King of Prussia was to form and execute greater Designs. On the 9th of October 1740, half Europe was thrown into Confusion by the Death of Charles VI. Emperor of Germany; by whose Death all the hereditary Dominions of the House of Austria descended, according to the pragmatic Sanction, to the eldest Daughter, who was married to the Duke of Lorrain, at the Emperor's Death Duke of Tuscany.

But the Princes of Germany, on the Decease of the Emperor fell upon the Austrian Territories as on a dead Carcase to be dismembered without Opposition. And among the rest, the King of Prussia, whose Ancestors had always laid claim to Part of the Dutchy of Silesia.

Accordingly he immediately marched a powerful Army into that Dutchy, but at the same Time, by a Manifesto, disclaimed any Design of injuring the Rights of the House of Austria; adding, that the Fear of being defeated by other Pretenders to the Austrian Dominions, obliged him to enter Silesia without any previous Expostulation with the Queen of Hungary.

This Declaration was received by the Austrians with Indignation; but the King pursued fued his Purpose of marching forward, and on the Frontiers of Silesia made a Speech to his Soldiers, in which he told them, that he considered them rather as Friends than Subjects, that the Troops of Brandenburg had been always eminent for their Bravery, that they would always fight in his Presence, and that he would not fail to recompence those who should distinguish themselves in his Service rather as a Father than as a King.

The Civilities of the great are never thrown away. The Soldiers would naturally follow such a Leader with Alacrity; especially when they expected no Opposition; but Expectations are too often deceived,

By thus suddenly entering into a Province which he was supposed more likely to protect than invade, he was soon Master of the greatest Part of it; but supposing the Inhabitants would not so easily submit to his Government when the Army was withdrawn, he endeavoured to persuade the Queen to a Cession of Silesia, imagining she would readily yield what was already lost. Accordingly he ordered his Ministers at Vienna, to declare,
 “ That he was ready to guarantee all the Do“ minions of the House of Austria: That he “ would conclude a Treaty with Austria, Rus- “ sia, and the maritime Powers: That he “ would endeavour that the Duke of Lorrain
 “ should be elected Emperor, and believed
 “ he should be able to accomplish it: That “ he would immediately advance to the Queen
 “ two

“ two Millions of Florins : That in Recompense for all these good Offices he required her to cede Silesia to him.”

This Declaration was accordingly made at Kienna ; but the King soon after thought proper to moderate his Claim, and ordered his Minister to hint that a Part of Silesia would satisfy him.

The Queen answered, that though the King alledged as his Reason for entering Silesia, the Danger of the Austrian Territories from other Pretenders, and endeavoured to persuade her to give up Part of her Possessions for the Safety of the Rest, it was evident that he was the first and only Invader, and that till he entered in a hostile Manner, all her Estates were unmolested.

To his Promises of Assistance she replied, that she set a high Value on the King of Prussia's Friendship, but that he was already obliged to assist her against Invaders both by the golden Bull, and the pragmatic Sanction, of which he was a Guarantee; and that if these Ties were of no Force, she knew not what to hope from other Engagements. With Regard to his Offers of Alliance with Russia and the maritime Powers, she observed, that it could never be necessary to alienate her Dominions for the Consolidation of an Alliance formed for no other Reason than to keep them entire.

As to his Interest in the Election of an Emperor, she expressed her Gratitude in the strongest strongest Terms; but added, that the Election ought to be free, and that it must be necessarily embarrassed by Contention raised in the Heart of the Empire. With Regard to the pecuniary Assistance proposed, she remarked, that no Prince ever made War to oblige another to take Money, and that the Contributions already levied in Silesia exceeded the two Millions offered as its Purchase.

She concluded with observing that her Value for the King of Prussia's Friendship was so great, that she was willing to purchase it at any Rate, except that of dismembering her Dominions, and exhorting him to perform his Part in the pragmatic Sanction.

The King finding Negotiations were not attended with Success, pushed forwards into Silesia, and gave the World an Instance, with how much Secrecy he could take his Measures. When he called a Council of War, he proposed a Council in a few Words, all his Generals wrote their Opinions in his Presence on separate Papers, which he carried away, and examining them in private formed his Resolution without imparting it otherwise than by his Orders.

His first Attempt was to release the People from the Rents and Services they used to pay to the Clergy, and seize on the Estates of the latter. He plundered the Convents of the Stores of Provisions; and on the Communities complaining to him, he replied, "That “He had never heard of any Magazines erected by the Apostles.”

Jablunca, one of the strong Towns of Silesia was the first that opposed his Prussian Majesty's Career; but was soon taken by a Detachment from his Army; though they soon after abandoned it for Want of Provisions, which the Austrian Hussars now every where in Motion were very busy to intercept.

But the taking of great Glogow, a large and well fortified City on the Borders of Poland, was attended with much greater Difficulty, and proved one of the most remarkable Events in the Silesian War.

This Town had for some Time been blocked up by the Prussians. But as it was well fortified and abundantly supplied with Ammunition and Provisions, and defended by a numerous Garrison, there was but little hopes of its surrendering in any reasonable Time. It was therefore determined to attack it by Storm. Accordingly on the 7th of March 1741, at Night, Prince Leopold of Anhalt Dessau, who commanded the Blockade, received from his Prussian Majesty, the proper Orders for that Purpose, pursuant to a Plan which had been previously consulted with his Majesty.

The following Day was spent in making the necessary Preparations, which being finished about Eight at Night, the Troops began to put themselves under Arms, and reached, about Ten, their several Posts, which were situated ated about a Mile from the Town. They did not long continue there, but marched, with the greatest Secrecy and Silence to the Foot of the Glacis, which they reached by Twelve. As soon as all the Troops were arrived, and the Signal given for the Attack, the Troops advanced to the Palisadoes, and leaping over them, threw themselves into the Couvert Way; at the same Time small Detachments were dispatched every Way to disarm every Enemy they could find.

The Prussians were now exposed, and the Town alarmed by their Fire; but this did not prevent them from descending into the Ditch, and from thence to advance to the Foot of the Rampart, which was thirty four Feet high, having a Slope of ten Feet, and rendered prodigious slippery by two Days hard Frost. They however soon surmounted all these Difficulties; and Prince Leopold with the Margrave Charles, and five or six others, first reached the Top of the Curtain; where they were soon joined by a Battalion and four Companies of Grenadiers, one of which seized a Bastion on the right, while another did the same on the left. They then found themselves under a Necessity of breaking down the Gate behind which the Generals Wallis and Reyski had now posted themselves with their Grenadiers; and who immediately, on the Prussians making some Holes in the Gate, saluted them with a Shower of Bullets, whereby four Men were killed on the Spot. But Prince Leopold causing the

Fire

Fire to be returned, General Reyski received two Wounds in his Belly, on which the Grenadiers fled, and Colonel Wallis was obliged to follow them. The Gate was now thrown open, and the Prussians passed through it into the Town. At the same Time two other Attacks were executed with the same Vigour, and with the same Success.

In Attempts of this Kind, many Accidents happen which cannot be read without Surprise. Four Prussian Grenadiers, who had climbed the Ramparts, missing their own Company, met an Austrian Captain with fifty two Men; they were at first terrified, and thought of nothing but Flight; but at last, gathering Courage, commanded the Austrians to lay down their Arms, and in the Confusion and Pannick which had seized their Enemies, and doubtless magnified their Numbers, were unexpectedly obeyed.

During the Time the Grenadiers were clearing the Ramparts, the Battalions entered the Town, through the Passages made by the former, and the whole Transaction was finished by One in the Morning.

The whole Force of the Prussians amounted to no more than four Battalions, and eighteen Companies of Grenadiers; and their whole Loss in the Action was only two Commission Officers, three Subalterns, and thirty three private Men. All the Garrison consisting of one thousand and sixty-five Men, together with the Generals Wallis and Reyski, were made made Prisoners of War. During the whole Attempt no Disorder happened, Murder and Plunder being both absolutely prohibited.

The Prussians found in the Place fifty Pieces of Brass Cannon, and a great Quantity of Ammunition, together with the military Chests, in which were thirty two thousand Florins.

Prince Leopold and the Margrave Charles received the Homage of the Nobility and Burghers to his Prussian Majesty, who was so greatly pleased with this Expedition, that he declared Prince Leopold General of Foot, and wrote him a very handsome Letter on the Occasion, in which he highly commended the Valour of all the Officers, adding that as he should never forget their gallant Behaviour, so he would take all Opportunities of convincing them of his complete Satisfaction.

A few Days after the taking of Glougaw, a Plot was discovered for carrying off the King of Prussia, and a Memorial was published, in which the Austrian Court was accused of employing Emissaries and Assassins against the King; and it was alledged in direct Terms, that one of them had confessed himself obliged by Oath to destroy him; which Oath had been administered to him in the Aulic Council in the Presence of the Duke of Lorrain.

To this the Austrians answered, that the Character of the Queen and the Duke was too well known, not to destroy the Force of such an Accusation; that the Tale of the Confession

Confession was an Imposture, and, in short, that no Attempt either on the Life or Liberty of the Prussian King had been made.

But whatever was the real Truth, with Regard to this Attempt, it served to inflame both Parties, and the Austrian Generals had Orders to give the Prussians Battle, be the Event what it would. Nor were these Orders received long before they were actually put in Execution.

Battle of Molwitz.

On Monday the 10th of April, 1741, the two Armies met at Molwitz, about a League from Neifs; and about Two in the Afternoon the Engagement began. The Austrians at first made the left Wing of the Prussians, commanded by Lieutenant General Count Schulenberg, retire. But the King of Prussia, on being informed that the Austrians were superior to him in Cavalry, had intermixed Grenadiers with his Horse, whereby this Confusion was recovered. The Attack on the right Wing was also very sharp; but less so than that on the left. The Austrians made several more Attacks, but being always repulsed with Loss, they retired in good Order, about Six in the Evening under the Cannon of Neifs, leaving the Prussians Masters of the Field of Battle.

The Austrians lost about four thousand Men, kill'd, wounded, and taken Prisoners, and the Prus-

Prussians had about six hundred killed, and fifteen hundred wounded.

There was after this no Action of Importance; for the Austrians retiring, abandoned Silesia, which in a small Time submitted to the Conqueror. But his Prussian Majesty irritated with Opposition, transferred his Vote at the Election of an Emperor to the Duke of Bavaria.

But the Time at which the Queen of Hungary, was willing to purchase Peace by the Resignation of Silesia was not yet arrived. She had all the Spirit, though not all the Power of her Ancestors, and could not bear the Thought of losing any Part of her patrimonial Dominions to her Enemies, which the Opinion of her Weakness raised every where against her.

In the Beginning of the Year 1742, the Elector of Bavaria was invested with the Imperial Dignity; being supported by the Arms of France, Master of the Kingdom of Bohemia, and confederated with the Elector Palatine and the Elector of Saxony, who claimed Moravia, and with the King of Prussia, who was in Possession of Silesia.

Such was the State of the Queen of Hungary, pressed on every Side, and on every Side preparing for Resistance, she yet refused all Offers of Accommodation, for every Prince set Peace at a Price which she was not yet so far humbled as to pay.

The King Prussia was among the most zealous, and forward in the Confederacy against gainst her. He promised to secure Bohemia for the Emperor, and Moravia to the Elector of Saxony; and finding no Enemy in the Field able to resist him, he returned to Berlin, leaving General Schwerin to prosecute his Conquests.

The Prussians, in the Midst of Winter took Olmütz, the Capital of Moravia, and laid the whole Country under Contribution. But the Cold hindering them from undertaking any Thing further, they only blocked up the Fortresses of Brin and Spielberg.

In the Spring the King of Prussia came again into the Field, and undertook the Siege of Brin; but upon the Approach of Prince Charles of Lorrain, retired from before it, and quitted Moravia, leaving only a Garrison in the Capital.

The Condition of the Queen of Hungary was now changed. She was a few Months before without Money, without Troops, and encircled with Enemies; the Bavarians had entered Austria; Vienna was threatened with a Siege; and the Queen had abandoned it to the Fate of War, and retired into Hungary, where she was received with Zeal and Affection.

Voltaire has asserted, that a large Sum was raised for her Succour by voluntary Subscriptions of English Ladies. It is the great Failings of a strong Imagination to catch greedily at Wonders. He was misinformed, and was, perhaps, to learn by a Second Enquiry, a Truth less splendid and amusing. A Contribution was by News-writers, upon their own Authority, fruitlessly proposed. It ended in nothing. The Parliament voted a Supply, and five hundred thousand Pounds were remitted to her.

It hath always been the Weakness of the Austrian Family to spend in the Magnificence of Empire, those Revenues which should be kept for its Defence. The Court is splendid, but the Treasury is empty, and at the Beginning of every War Advantages are gained against them, before their Armies can be assembled and equipped.

The English Money was to the Austrians as a Shower to a Field, where all the vegetative Powers are kept unactive by a long Continuance of Drought. The Armies which had been hitherto hid in Mountains and Forests started out of their Retreats, and wherever the Queen's Standard was erected, Nations hardly known by their Names, swarmed immediately about it. An Army, especially a defensive Army, multiplies itself. The Contagion of Enterprize spreads from one Heart to another. Zeal for a Native, or Detestation for a foreign Sovereign, Hope of sudden Greatness or Riches, Friendship or Emulation between particular Men, or what are perhaps more general and powerful, Desire of Novelty, and Impatience of Inactivity, fill a Camp with Adventurers, add Rank to Rank, and Squadron to Squadron.

The

The Queen had still Enemies to engage on every Side, but she had also Armies ready to oppose them; those of his Prussian Majesty occupied the adjacent Parts of Czazlaw, the most fertile Canton in all Bohemia. It abounds with small Towns and Villages very close to one another; and is watered on one Side by the Sazava, and on the other by the Elbe; which greatly contributes to produce the excellent Pasturages with which it abounds.

The Prussians having thus abandoned Moravia, the Saxons, who had co-operated with them in the Conquest of that Province, which they expected to have kept themselves, and seeing all Hopes of sudden Acquisitions defeated, and the Province abandoned again to its former Masters, left the Prussian Army as soon as it reached the Confines of Bohemia, and retired into their own Country.

The Queen of Hungary, impatient to render her Arms successful in Bohemia, and depending greatly on the Experience of Count Königseck, who was then with Prince Charles, gave absolute Orders to act with Vigour; and if possible to bring on a decisive Battle. The Prussian Army was still in the Neighbourhood of Czazlaw, and divided into three Bodies: One was at Leutomissel, under the Command of Lieutenant-General Jects; the second at Chrudin, where his Prussian Majesty had his Quarters; and the third between Czazlaw and Ruttenberg, under the Command of Lieutenant General Kalchstein.

The Reinforcements were scarcely arrived at the Prussian Army, when his Majesty was informed, that Prince Charles of Lorrain was advancing towards Bohemia with a considerable Army. On this News being confirmed, his Majesty reassembled his whole Forces at Chrudin, and on the 13th of May they entered the Camp marked out for them on a rising Ground; the right Wing reaching to the Village of Middlefresh, and the left to the Rivulet of Chrudimska. On the 14th the Prussians received Advice that the Austrians were arrived upon the Banks of the Sazava. The Magazines of the Prussian Army were distributed along the Elbe, in Places where the Communication was easy by Means of a Bridge: But the Enemy made themselves Masters of it, and also of Czazlaw.

The King of Prussia, who watched attentively every Motion of Prince Charles, suspected that his Intention was to cut off his Communications both with his Magazines, and also with the French then in Bohemia; commanded by Marshal Broglie. These Circumstances admitted of no Delay; and accordingly he lost no Time, but putting himself immediately at the Head of his Vanguard, consisting of about 10 Battalions, and 20 Squadrons of Dragoons and Hussars, marched directly to Hermanstadt, giving the Prince of Anhalt Orders to follow him the next Day with the rest of the Army. As soon as the Provisions were arrived, and he had chosen an advantageous tageous Post upon a rising Ground, he went himself to reconnoitre the Enemy, from the Top of a little Hill, where he distinctly perceived a Body of Austrians, which he guessed to consist of 7 or 8000 Men, encamped at Wilimow. The next Day that Body having disappeared, his Majesty marched for Ruttemberg, where he had a Magazine. His Design was, if possible, to gain a March upon the Enemy, if they intended to continue their Route to Prague, and to be at hand to join the rest of the Army, if Occasion offered of giving Battle.

Battle of Czaazlaw.

On the 16th in the Evening the Prince of Anhalt sent his Majesty Word, that the Enemy was in Motion, and that several Deserters had declared to him, that Prince Charles had drawn out all his different Garrisons, to reinforce his Army; that it was their Vanguard which had appeared the Day before; but, taking the King's Detachment for the Army itself, retired, during the Night, to the main Body, and that the next Day about Noon, the Austrians being reunited, had begun their March. These Advices being afterwards confirmed, his Majesty, at Five o'Clock in the Morning of the 17th, gave Orders for his Army to advance. The Enemy also decamped the Evening before, and was advancing behind Czaazlaw in four Columns. His Prussian Majesty being informed of this, sent Orders to the Prince of Anhalt to gain the Height, to reinforce the first Line of Infantry, and to leave in the second a sufficient Interval to place the ten Battalions and twenty Squadrons, which the King himself was bringing up; and which no sooner arrived, than they began to cannonade the Enemy.

The Prussian Cavalry was drawn up upon the Height in such a Manner that they formed a larger Front than the Austrian Cavalry. The King ordered Lieutenant General Bodenbrock to begin the Attack; and the Shock of the Prussian Cavalry was at first so violent, that those of the Enemy in the first Column were thrown into Confusion. Count Ruttemberg pierced the second, and made two Regiments of Infantry in the left Wing retreat. But a thick Dust which now rose, hindered the Prussians from taking the Benefit of this first Advantage. The Right Wing of the Prussian Army, which had formed the Attack Gibbetways, was taken in Flank by a Part of the Austrian Cavalry of the second Column, which made it give Way: But, this Attack excepted, the same Wing of the Prussians had gained a considerable Advantage over the Enemy's Cavalry on the left Wing, during the Time that its Infantry, which had made a half Turn to the Right, had successfully attacked the Village of Sobosistow, where two Battalions of the Regiment of Schwerin were posted.

The Cavalry of the left Wing of the Prussians having returned to the Charge, the Regiments

ments of Prince William, and of Waldau, pierced the second Line of the Austrians left Wing, and cut in Pieces the Regiment of Wertes. But the Prussian Cavalry, being desirous of flanking the Enemy's Infantry, weakened its Left, and by that Means gave the Austrians an Opportunity of advancing some Squadrons of Dragoons, which took the Prussian Infantry posted on the other Side of Chotozio in Flank. This Infantry suffered considerably; for the Austrian Grenadiers, who advanced behind the Cavalry, took the Village and set in on Fire. The two Battalions who were obliged to abandon it, posted themselves in the Flank of the Infantry, which then redoubled its Fire; and the Austrian Cavalry being no longer able to oppose such powerful Attacks, the King of Prussia advanced with the whole right Wing of the Infantry, by which Means the Fire became so hot on this Side, that the Enemy, being unable to recover themselves from the Disorder into which they were thrown, were obliged to fly before the victorious Prussians.

What contributed to augment this Disorder, was an Action of the Prussian Hussars, who having attacked the Infantry of the second Line of the Austrians, it was obliged to form a hollow Square, and being as it were wedged in by this Position, it suffered equally on all Sides. Three or four Squadrons stood as yet firm on the Side of Czazlaw, but retired on the Approach of the King of Prussia to attack them; for that Prince was every where, and even in the hottest of the Fire, with an Intrepidity, that his Courtiers trembled for his Safety.

This Victory was the more glorious for the King of Prussia, as the Austrians fought with the greatest Bravery; their right Wing had repulsed three different Times the right Wing of the Prussians, without the least Sign of Confusion, after having made them recoil as far as Chotowitz, and set Fire to that Village. Prince Charles, who observed every Motion with the greatest Attention, did every Thing that was possible for a General to do; but his disadvantageous Situation contributed to the Defeat of his Troops, which he could not rally, on Account of the incommodious Nature of the Ground. The Prince exposed himself so often during the Action, that he several Times narrowly escaped being killed or taken Prisoner.

This Victory, though very glorious to the Prussians, was dearly bought, their Army was much weakened, especially their Cavalry, which suffered extremely. Peace is easily made when it is necessary to both Parties; and the King of Prussia had Reason to believe that the Austrians were not his only Enemies. When he found Prince Charles advancing, he sent to Broglie for Assistance, and was answered, "That he must have Orders from "Versailles." Such a Desertion of his most powerful Ally disconcerted him, but the Battle was unavoidable.

When

When the Prussians were returned to their Camp, the King hearing that an Austrian Officer was brought in mortally wounded, had the Condescension to visit him. The Officer, struck with this Act of Humanity, said, after a short Conversation, "I should die, Sir, contentedly after this Honour, if I might first shew my Gratitude to your Majesty, by informing you with what Allies you are now united; Allies whose sole Intention is to deceive you." The King appearing to suspect this Intelligence: "Sir, said the Officer, if you will permit me to send a Messenger to Vienna, I believe the Queen will not refuse to transmit an intercepted Letter now in her Hands, which will put the Matter beyond Dispute."

The Messenger was sent, and the Letter transmitted, which contained the Orders sent to Broglio, who was, 1st, forbidden to mix his Troops on any Occasion with the Prussians. 2dly, He was ordered to act always at a Distance from the King. 3dly, To keep always a Body of twenty thousand Men to observe the Prussian Army. 4thly, To watch very closely the Motions of the King, for Reasons of the last Importance. 5thly, To hazard nothing, but to pretend Want of Reinforcements, or the Absence of Belleisle.

The King now with great Reason considered himself as disengaged from the Confederacy, being deserted by the Saxons, and betrayed by the French; he therefore accepted the Mediation of his Britannick Majesty, and in three Weeks after the Battle of Czazlaw concluded a Peace with the Queen of Hungary, by which she granted to him not only the upper and lower Silesia, except the Principality of Jeschchen and Trappau, but also the Principality of Glatz in Bohemia. The King, on his Part, engaged to observe a perfect Neutrality during the War. and took upon himself to pay the Sum due to the English Merchants, Principal and Interest, on Account of the Mortgage made January 10, 1735; on Silesia, by the late Emperor.

This Treaty of Peace with the Queen of Hungary was one of the first Proofs given by the King of Prussia of the Secrecy of his Councils. Belleisle, the French General, was with him in the Camp as a Friend and Coadjutor in Appearance, but in Reality a Spy and Writer of Intelligence. Men who have great Confidence in their own Penetration, are often by that Confidence deceived; they imagine that they can pierce thro' all the Involutions of Intrigue, without the Diligence necessary to weaker Minds, and therefore sit idle and secure; they believe that none can hope to deceive them, and therefore that none will venture to make the Experiment. Belleisle, with all his Reputation of Sagacity, though he was in the Prussian Camp, gave every Day fresh Assurances of the King's Adherence to the Allies, while Broglio, who commanded the Army at a Distance, discovered sufficient Reasons sons to suspect his Desertion. Broglie was slighted, and Belleisle believed, till on the 11th of June the Treaty was signed, and the King declared his Resolution of observing a Neutrality. This is one of the great Performances of Polity which we agreed to celebrate and admire.

The King of Prussia having thus obtained Silesia, returned to his own Capital, where he applied himself to relieve the Wants, and augment the Commerce of his Subjects; reformed the Laws, forbid the Torture of Criminals, concluded a defensive Alliance with England, and applied himself to the Augmentation of his Army.

To enlarge Dominions has been the Boast of many Princes; to diffuse Happiness and Security through wide Regions has been granted to few. The King of Prussia has aspired to both these Honours, and endeavoured to unite the Glory of a Legislator to that of a Conqueror.

To settle Property, to suppress false Claims, and to regulate the Administration of civil and criminal Justice, are Attempts so difficult and useful, that an Account of his Prussian Majesty's Attempts of this Kind must not be omitted.

It is abundantly evident that the King has consider'd the Nature and Reasons of Law, from his Dissertation on the Reasons for enacting and repealing Laws. Many of his Observations are strictly just, and really useful; and a candid Reader must observe, that he appears always propense

propense to the Side of Mercy. “ If a poor “ Mans, says he, steals through Necessity a “ Watch, or a few Pieces from one to whom
 “ the Loss is inconsiderable, is this a suffi“ cient Reason for condemning him to “ Death ?”

He regrets that the Laws against Duels have proved ineffectual, and is of Opinion that they can never attain their End, unless the Princes of Europe shall agree not to afford an Asylum to Duelists, and to punish all who shall insult their Equals, either by Word, Deed, or Writing. He seems indeed to suspect this Scheme of being chimerical. “ Yet why, says
 “ he, should not personal Quarrels be submit“ ted to Judges, as well as Questions of Pos“ session? And why should not a general Con“ gress be appointed for the general Good of “ Mankind, as well as for so many Purposes
 “ of less Importance ?”

It is perhaps impossible to review the Laws of any Country without discovering many Defects, and many Superfluities. Laws often continue when their Reasons have ceased. Laws made for the first State of Society continue unabolished, when the general Form of Life is changed. Parts of the judicial Procedure, which were at first only accidental, become in Time essential ; and Formalities are accumulated on each other, till the Art of Litigation requires more Study than the Discovery of Right.

The King of Prussia examining the Constitutions of his own Country, thought them such as could only be amended by a general Abrogation, and the Establishment of a new Body of Law, to which he gave the Name of the CODE FREDERICK, which is comprized in one Volume of no great Bulk, and must therefore unavoidably contain general Positions, to be accommodated to particular Cases by the Wisdom and Integrity of the Courts. To embarrass Justice by Multiplicity of Laws, or to hazard it by Confidence in Judges, seem to be the opposite Rocks on which all civil Institutions have been wrecked, and between which legislative Wisdom has never yet found an open Passage.

Of this new System of Laws, contracted as it is, a full Account cannot be expected here; but that Curiosity may not be dismissed without some Gratification, the following Epitome of his Majesty's Plan for the Reformation of his Courts, has been drawn up.

The Differences which arise between Members of the same Society may be terminated by a voluntary Agreement between the Parties, by Arbitration, or by a judicial Process.

The two first Methods produce more frequently a temporary Suspension of Disputes than a final Termination. Courts of Justice are therefore necessary, with a settled Method of Procedure, of which the most simple is to cite the Parties, to hear their Pleas, and dismiss them with immediate Decision.

This

This however is in many Cases impracticable, and in others is so seldom practised that it is frequent rather to incur Loss than to seek for legal Reparation, by entering a Labyrinth of which there is no End.

This Tedioufness of Suits keeps the Parties in Disquiet and Perturbation, rouses and perpetuates Animosities, exhausts the Litigants by Expence, retards the Progress of their Fortune, and discourages Strangers from settling.

These Inconveniencies, with which the best regulated Polities of Europe are embarrassed, must be removed, not by the total Prohibition of Suits, which is impossible, but by Contraction of Proceses; by opening an easy Way for the Appearance of Truth, and removing all Obstructions by which it is concealed.

The Ordinance of 1667, by which Lewis the XIVth established an Uniformity of Procedure through all his Courts, has been considered as one of the greatest Benefits of his Reign.

The King of Prussia observing that each of his Provinces had a different Method of judicial Procedure, proposed to reduce them all to one Form, which being tried with Success in Pomerania, a Province remarkable for Contention, he afterwards extended to all his Dominions, ordering the Judges to inform him of any Difficulties which arose from it.

Some

Some settled Method is necessary in judicial Procedures. Small and simple Causes might be decided upon the oral Pleas of the two Parties appearing before the Judge: But many Cases are so entangled and perplexed, as to require all the Skill and Abilities of those who devote their Lives to the Study of the Law.

Advocates, or Men who can understand and explain the Question to be discussed, are therefore necessary. But these Men, instead of endeavouring to promote Justice and discover Truth, have exerted their Wits in the Defence of bad Causes, by Forgeries of Facts and Fallacies of Arguments.

To remedy this Evil the King has ordered an Enquiry into the Qualifications of the Advocates. All those who practise without a regular Admission, or who can be convicted of disingenuous Practices, are discarded. And the Judges are commanded to examine which of the Causes now depending have been protracted by the Crimes and Ignorance of the Advocates, and to dismiss those who shall appear culpable.

When Advocates are too numerous to live by honest Practice, they busy themselves in exciting Disputes, and disturbing the Community; the Number of these to be employed in each Court is therefore fixed.

The Reward of the Advocates is fixed with due Regard to the Nature of the Cause, and the Labour required, but not a Penny is received ceived by them till the Suit is ended, that it may be their Interest, as well as that of the Clients, to shorten the Process.

No Advocate is admitted in petty Courts, small Towns, or Villages; where the Poverty of the People, and for the most Part the low Value of the Matter contested, make Dispatch absolutely necessary. In those Places the Parties shall appear in Person, and the Judge make a summary Decision.

There must be likewise allowed a Subordination of Tribunals, and a Power of Appeal. No Judge is so skilful and attentive as not sometimes to err. Few are so honest as not sometimes to be partial. Petty Judges would become insupportably tyrannical, if they were not restrained by the Fear of a superior Judge, and their Decisions would be negligent or arbitrary, if they were not in Danger of seeing them examined and cancelled.

The Right of Appeal must be restrained, that Causes may not be transferred without End from Court to Court; and a peremptory Decision must at last be made.

When an Appeal is made to a higher Court, the Appellant is allowed only four Weeks to frame his Bill, the Judge of the lower Court being to transmit to the higher all the Evidences and Informations. If upon the first View of the Cause thus opened, it shall appear that the Appeal was made without just Cause, the first Sentence shall be confirmed without Citation of the Defendant. If any new

new Evidence shall appear, or any Doubts arise, both the Parties shall be heard.

In the Discussion of Causes Altercation must be allowed ; yet to Altercation some Limits must be put. There are therefore allowed a Bill, an Answer, a Reply, and a Rejoinder, to be delivered in Writing.

No Cause is allowed to be heard in more than three different Courts. To further the first Decision, every Advocate is enjoined under severe Penalties not to begin a Suit till he has collected all the necessary Evidence. If the first Court has decided in an unsatisfactory Manner, an Appeal may be made to the second, and from the second to the third. The Process on each Appeal is limited to six Months. The third Court may indeed pass an erroneous Judgment, and then the Injury is without Redress. But this Objection is without End, and therefore without Force. No Method can be found of preserving Humanity from Error, but of Contest there must sometime be an End ; and he who thinks himself injured for Want of an Appeal to a fourth Court, must consider himself as suffering for the Publick.

There is a special Advocate appointed for the Poor.

The Attornies, who had formerly the Care of collecting Evidence, and of adjusting all the Preliminaries of a Suit, are now totally dismissed ; the whole Affair is put into the Hands of

of the Advocates, and the Office of an Attorney is annulled for ever.

If any Man is hindered by some lawful Impediment from attending this Suit, Time will be granted him upon the Representation of his Case.

Such is the Order according to which civil Justice is administered through the extensive Dominions of the King of Prussia; which, if it exhibits nothing very subtle or profound, affords one Proof more that the Right is easily discovered, and that Men do not so often want Ability to find, as Willingness to practise it.

Having given this short Account of his Majesty's Attempt to reform the Laws of his Country, we shall now return to the War.

The Queen of Hungary being thus entangled on one Side, and freed from the most formidable of her Enemies, soon persuaded the Saxons to follow the Steps of the King of Prussia, and embrace the Offers of Peace. After which she took Possession of Bavaria, drove the Emperor, after all his imaginary Conquests, to the Shelter of a neutral Town, where he was treated as a Fugitive, and the French driven successively from all their Conquests in Bohemia.

Marshal Broglie, as soon as he was convinced that the King of Prussia had made a Peace with the Queen of Hungary, left Frauenberg, and directed his March to Pyseck, from whence he

he sent Orders for reassembling all the French and Bavarian Troops, which were scattered up and down in different Quarters; and all together composed an Army of twenty thousand Men, including the Troops under the Command of Mess. Boufflers and Aubigny. The former he left at Crunaw, and the other at Thein, about five Leagues from Pyseck, and two from Frauenberg, with Orders to prepare themselves for a vigorous Defence in case they were attacked. By these Precautions he hoped to remain in Quiet till the Recruits he expected from France arrived; and upon Advice that twelve thousand Men were advanced to the Neighbourhood, he determined to meet them, intending afterwards to return and take Post in the Neighbourhood of Frauenberg.

These Dispositions were as well concerted, as the present Conjuncture would admit; but they failed of the desired Success; for Prince Charles had used such Diligence, that his Vanguard appeared upon the Moldau when they least expected him. M. d' Aubigny, not having Time to make any Disposition for the least Defence, was obliged to abandon Thein, and to repass the River, in order to save his Detachment, without having Time even to break down the Bridge, so closely was he pursued by the Hussars. M. de Boufflers, who was also obliged to abandon Crunaw, retired to Pracholitz, and from thence to Pyseck, where the Gros of the Army were encamped; but not without the Loss of his Cannon, Baggage, and the

the greatest Part of his Detachment being cut to Pieces.

Prince Charles, after he had passed the Moldau with his whole Army, marched in two Columns, in Hopes of finding the French Troops; but Marshal Broglio, informed of his Motions, and having but twelve thousand Men to oppose to above forty thousand, divided his Army into three Bodies of four thousand each. He then passed a Rivulet, betwixt the Enemy and him; and ranging his Men in Order of Battle, seemed disposed to hazard an Engagement with Prince Charles. So bold a Step in Presence of a formidable Enemy, not only encouraged his own Soldiers, but also made the Enemy cautious; for though they appeared on the opposite Bank of the Rivulet, and even crossed it, the Austrian General did not think proper to attack them; so that they only cannonaded each other, and skirmished, during the whole Day.

Night coming on, the French General took the Advantage of it, to steal a March upon the Enemy: He decamped without Noise, and marched with all possible Diligence for six Days, and on the seventh arrived before Sunset before Pyseck; from whence he immediately departed, leaving in it a Garrison of twelve hundred Men. Prince Charles however came up the next Day and took it, as also Pilsen; after which he continued his March towards Prague, in Pursuit of Marshal Broglio.

Though

Though the French Army was encamped in the most advantageous Manner under the Cannon of Prague, yet it was reduced to such a State, that there was no Need for a Spirit of Prophecy to foretel that it must soon yield to superior Force, and receive such Terms as the Conqueror should think fit to impose.

The Queen of Hungary was withdrawing her Troops out of Silesia, and marching them into Bohemia; all the Passages leading from France and Bavaria, were shut against Men and Provisions; and all Communication with Saxony cut off. These Inconveniencies induced the Court of France to send full Powers to the two Generals to treat of an Agreement, with Respect to Bohemia; but the Austrian Generals rejecting all Proposals, the Besieged prepared to make a vigorous Defence. The French Army within, and encamped without the City, amounted to about twenty two thousand Men.

The Month of July was then beginning, and though some Passages to Prague were still open, Provisions were monstrously dear. Marshal Broglio made all necessary Preparations for a vigorous Defence; and all the Officers of his Army, exasperated at the Proceedings of the Austrian Generals, determined to defend themselves to the last Extremity. In order to prevent all Inconveniencies from the Intelligence which the Austrians might have with the Inhabitants, they were disarmed, Guards placed all over the Town, and their most valuable valuable Effects carried into a Church, as Pledges of their Conduct; a little Fortrefs was also built for further Security, and several Redoubts mounted with Canon.

The grand Duke who arrived at the Camp before Prague, gave Orders for hastening the Works of the Siege, for which an immense Artillery was brought; and on the 28th of July the Place was invested on all Sides. The Besieged made several Sallies, which were not favourable to them; and the Scarcity of Provisions was an equal if not a greater Perplexity than all the Dispositions of the Besiegers. M. de Sachellis, who was Purveyor of the Army, had taken such wise Precautions for storing the Magazines, that the Troops could not be said to want Bread, though remarkably bad; and besides this, they had no other Provisions. There was therefore a Necessity for killing the Horses, and distributing their Flesh among the Troops; and with it they also made Broth for the Sick, who were very numerous. The Officer was often reduced to feed as the Soldier; but to what will not People accustom themselves, when Necessity prescribes?

Of all the Sallies made by the Besieged, the most remarkable was that of the 22d of August. At a Council of War held the 21st, at which all the General Officers assisted, it was resolved that a Sally should be made the next Day with twelve thousand Men, commanded by the Duke of Biron. Accordingly on

on the 22d at three in the Afternoon, while the grand Duke was at Table, Word was brought him that a great Number of Troops appeared on the Walls of Prague. Prince Charles, Count Konigseck, General Festitz, and several other general Officers, were with him, a general Council being to be held that Day after Dinner, which was very sumptuous; for though the French were in great Want, Provisions were plenty, in the Austrian Camp. When the Advice was first brought in, Prince Charles, cried, "What, will they not give us "Time to eat our Dinner!" But one of the grand Duke's Adjutants coming directly, and confirming the same Advice, the Prince rose from Table, and going upon a high Ground, perceived distinctly, by the Help of a Spying Glass, that what he had been told was true; for he saw not only the Walls filled with Troops, but also the red Flag, which the Besieged had hoisted, as a Signal of some desperate Resolution. He immediately gave Orders for some Regiments to march out of the Camp, to support the Troops in the Trenches, and those that guarded the Batteries.

Towards four in the Afternoon, the French, with the Duke of Biron at their Head, sallied out, extending themselves to the Right and Left and fell with such Impetuosity upon the Approaches, that they drove all before them, Workmen and Soldiers, who were in the Trenches, putting all to the Sword who came in their Way without Distinction, and without Quarter. Their Attack was so furious, that they penetrated to the first Parallel; threw down the Gabions; filled up great Part of the Trenches; made themselves Masters of a Battery of twelve Pieces of Cannon, nailing up what they could not send to the Town; took three Pair of Colours; and made above two hundred Prisoners, among whom was old General Monti, who commanded the Artillery and Engineers. After so considerable an Advantage, they ought no Doubt to have retired; but hurried on by their natural Ardour, they engaged themselves farther than was prudent; and were stopped in the Midst of their Career, by a Body of Troops detached from the Camp.

There was now a Necessity for coming to a close Engagement: The Regiment of Navarre, with their Bayonets fixed, charged two Regiments of Austrian Dragoons dismounted, where there was a dreadful Slaughter on both Sides; at the same Time the King's Regiment was attacked by that of Szirma Hungarians, and suffered greatly. In fine, after two Hours very hot Engagement on both Sides, the French were obliged to retire, not being able to support themselves any longer against the Austrians, whose Number augmented every Moment by fresh Troops from the Camp. They however made their Retreat in good Order, carrying with them the Cannon, Colours, and Prisoners.

After

After this memorable Sally the Besieged made only small Ones as Occasion required. In the mean Time the Scarcity became still greater in the Town; till at last it became intollerable.

The Grand Duke having learned, in the Beginning of September, that Marshal Maillebois was in full March with an Army, to relieve the Besieged; and doubting of Success in his Enterprize against Prague, began to think of raising the Siege: Accordingly on the 8th he caused his Artillery to be transported to Pyseck, and on the 14th, at Five in the Morning, his whole Army decamped, and took the Road to Braun and Pilsen, leaving only some Regiments of light Troops before Prague, to block up the Place: But the Austrian Troops were no sooner at a certain Distance, than the Gates were thrown open, and the French sent out Parties into all the adjacent Villages to procure Provisions. Marshal Broglio also departed from Prague with twelve thousand Men, in order to join Marshal Maillebois; but this the Austrians prevented.

The Court of France disappointed and offended, conferred the chief Command of Maillebois's Army on Marshal Broglio, who found Means to keep the Austrians employ'd, till Belleisle, by a sudden Sally, quitted Prague. Broglio then retired over the Rhine into the French Dominions, waisting in his Retreat, the Country he had undertaken to protect, and burning Towns and destroying Magazines of Corn with such Wantonness, as gave Reason to believe that he expected Commendation from his Court for any Mischiefs, done by whatever Means.

The Austrians pursued their Advantages, recovered all their strong Places, in some of which French Garrisons had been left, and made themselves Masters of Bavaria; by taking not only Munich, the Capital, but Ingoldstadt, the strongest Fortification in the Elector's Dominions, where they found a great Number of Cannon, and a large Quantity of Ammunition; intended, in the Dreams of projected Greatness, for the Siege of Vienna, all the Archives of the State, the Plate and Ornaments of the Electoral Palace, and what had been considered as most worthy of Preservation. They however took nothing away, except the warlike Stores. An Oath of Allegiance to the Queen was required of the Bavarians, but without any Explanation whether temporary or perpetual.

The Emperor lived at Frankfort, in the Security that was allowed to neutral Places; but without much Respect from the German Princes, except upon some Objections made by the Queen to the Validity of his Election, the King of Prussia declared himself determined to support him in the Imperial Dignity with all his Forces.

This might be considered as a Token of no great Affection to the Queen of Hungary; but it seems not to have raised much Alarm. The German Princes were afraid of involving their Country

Country in new Misfortunes. To contest the Election of an Emperor, once invested and acknowledged, would be to overthrow the whole Germanick Constitution. Perhaps no Election by Plurality of Suffrages was ever made among human Beings, to which it might not be objected that Voices were procured by illicit Influence.

Some Suspicions, however, were raised by the King's Declaration, which he endeavoured to obviate by ordering his Ministers to declare at Vienna and London, that he was resolved not to violate the Treaty of Breslau. This Declaration was sufficiently ambiguous, and could not satisfy those whom it might silence. But this was not a Time for nice Disquisitions; to distrust the King of Prussia might have provoked him, and it was most convenient to consider him as a Friend, till he appeared as an open Enemy.

About the Middle of the Year 1744, he raised new Alarms by collecting his Troops and putting them in Motion. The Earl of Hindford about this Time demanded the Troops stipulated for the Protection of Hanover; not perhaps because they were thought necessary, but that the King's Designs might be guessed from his Answer, which was, that Troops were not granted for the Defence of any Country till that Country was in Danger, and that he could not believe the Electorate of Hanover to be in much Danger of an Invasion, since the Elect^r had withdrawn the native Troops, and put them into the Pay of England.

It was now evident that he had formed Designs which rendered it necessary that his Troops should be kept together, and the Time soon arrived when the Scene was to be opened. Prince Charles of Lorrain having chased the French out of Bavaria, lay for some Months encamped on the Rhine, endeavouring to pass it into Alsace. His Attempts had long been opposed by the Skill and Vigilance of the French General, till at last, June 21, 1744, he executed his Design, and lodged his Army in the French Dominions, to the Surprise and Joy of a great Part of Europe. It was now expected that the Territories of France would, in their Turn, feel the Miseries of War, and the Nation which had so long kept the World in Alarm, be taught at last the Value of Peace.

The King of Prussia now saw the Austrian Troops at a great Distance from him, engaged in a foreign Country against the most powerful of all their Enemies. Now, therefore, was the Time to discover that he had lately made a Treaty at Frankfort with the Emperor, by which he had engaged, "That as the Court of Vienna and his Allies appeared backward to re-establish the Tranquility of the Empire, and more cogent Methods appeared necessary, he, being animated with a Desire of co-operating towards the Pacification of Germany, should " make

“ make an Expedition for the Conquest of “ Bohemia, and to put it into the Possession of “ the Emperor, his Heirs and Successors for “ ever, in Gratitude for which the Emperor
 “ should resign to him and his Successors, a “ certain Number of Lordships, which are “ now Part of the Kingdom of Bohemia. His “ Imperial Majesty likewise guaranties to the “ King of Prussia the perpetual Possession of “ Upper Austria, as soon as he shall have oc“ cupied it by Conquest.”

In Prosecution of this Treaty he put his Troops in Motion, and, according to his Promise, while the Austrians were invading France, he invaded Bohemia.

Princes have this remaining of Humanity, that they think themselves obliged not to make War without a Reason; though their Reasons are not always satisfactory. Lewis XIV. seemed to think his own Glory a sufficient Motive for the Invasion of Holland. The Czar of Moscow attacked Charles XII. of Sweden, because he had not been treated with sufficient Respect when he made a Journey in Disguise. Nor did the King of Prussia attack the Queen of Hungary without publishing his Reasons, which appeared in a Manifesto on the 30th of July, in which he declares;

That he can no longer stand an idle Spectator of the Troubles in Germany, but finds himself obliged to make Use of Force to restore the Power of the Laws, and the Authority of the Emperor.

That the Queen of Hungary had treated the Emperor's hereditary Dominions with inexpressible Cruelty.

That Germany had been over-run with foreign Troops, which had marched through neutral Countries without the customary Requisitions.

That the Emperor's Troops had been attacked under neutral Fortresses, and obliged to abandon the Empire of which their Master is the Head.

That the Imperial Dignity had been treated with great Indecency by the Hungarian Troops.

That the Queen, by declaring the Election of the Emperor void, and the Diet of Frankfurt illegal, had not only violated the Imperial Dignity, but injured all the Princes, who have the Right of Election.

That he had no particular Quarrel with the Queen of Hungary, that he desired nothing for himself, and only entered as an Auxiliary into a War for the Liberty of Germany.

That the Emperor had offered to quit his Pretensions to the Dominions of Austria, on Condition of his hereditary Countries being restored to him.

That this Proposal had been made to the King of England at Hanau, and rejected in such a Manner, as shewed that the King of England had no Intention to restore Peace, but rather to make his Advantage of the Troubles.

That

That the Mediation of the Dutch had been desired, but that they had declined to interpose, knowing the Inflexibility of the English and Austrian Courts.

That the same Terms were again offered at Vienna, and again rejected; and therefore the Queen must impute it to her own Councils, that her Enemies find new Allies.

That he was not fighting for any Interest of his own; that he demanded nothing for himself, but was determined to exert all his Power in Defence of the Emperor, in Vindication of the Right of Election, and in Support of the Liberties of Germany, which the Queen of Hungary would enslave.

When this Declaration was sent to the Prussian Minister in England, it was accompanied with a Remonstrance to the King, in which many of the foregoing Positions were repeated; the Candour and Disinterestedness of the Emperor magnified; the dangerous Designs of the Austrians display'd; and it was imputed to them as the most flagrant Violation of the Germanick Constitution, that they had driven the Emperor's Troops out of the Empire.

This Declaration astonished Austria and all her Allies, as it at once dismounted them from the Summit of Success, and obliged them to fight through the War a second Time. What Succours, or what Promises Prussia received from France, has never been publickly known, but it may reasonably be supposed that they were something extraordinary, as the Assistance of the former was then so absolutely necessary at that Time to the latter.

The French, who from ravaging the Empire at Discretion, and wasting whatever they found, either among Enemies or Friends, were now driven into their own Dominions, and in their own Dominions were insulted and pursued, were on a Sudden, by this new Auxiliary, restored to their former Superiority, at least were disburthened of their Invaders, and delivered from their Terrors. And all the Enemies of the House of Bourbon saw with Indignation and Amazement, the Recovery of that Power which they had, with so much Cost and Bloodshed, brought low, and which their Animosity and Elation had disposed them to imagine yet lower than it really was.

The Prussian Manifesto was not however long without an Answer, which was transmitted to the European Princes, with some Observations on the Prussian Minister's Remonstrance to the Court of Vienna, which he was ordered to read, but not deliver to the Austrian Council.

The Queen, in her Answer, after charging the King of Prussia with breaking the Treaty of Breslau, and observing how much her Enemies will exult to see the Peace now broken the third Time by him, declares ;

That she had no Intention of injuring the Rights of the Electors, and that it was the Man-

Manner of the Election, not the Event, that she called in Question.

That she had spared the Emperor's Troops with great Tenderness, and that they were driven out of the Empire only because they were in the Service of France.

That she was so far from disturbing the Peace of the Empire, that the only Commotions now raised in it, are the Effects of the Armaments of the King of Prussia.

Nothing is more tedious than publick Records when they relate to the Affairs which, by Distance of Time or Place, lose their Power to interest the Reader. Every Thing grows little as it grows remote, and of Things thus diminished, it is sufficient to survey the Aggregate without a minute Examination of the Parts. This Method we have pursued with regard to the Prussian Manifesto and Answer of the Queen of Hungary.

The King of Prussia took all possible Precautions to secure the Success of his Enterprize. He was to invade a Country guarded only by the Faith of Treaties, and therefore left unarmed, and unprovided for all Defence. He had engaged the French to attack Prince Charles before he should repass the Rhine, in order to prevent the speedy March of the Austrians into Bohemia: They were also to yield him such other Assistance as the Exigency of Affairs might require.

Campaign of 1744.

Relying therefore on the Promises of the French, he resolved to attempt the Ruin of the House of Austria, and accordingly in the Month of August 1744, entered Bohemia at the Head of a hundred and four thousand Men. On passing the Frontiers of that Kingdom he published a Proclamation, in which he promised, that his Army should observe the strictest Discipline, and that those who made no Resistance should be suffered to remain quietly in their Habitations. He required that all Arms, in whatever Custody they might be placed, should be delivered up, and put into the Hands of publick Officers. He still declared himself to act only as an Auxiliary to the Emperor, and with no other Design than to establish Peace and Tranquility in Germany.

His Progress was such as gave great Hopes to the Enemies of Austria; like Cæsar, he conquered as he advanced, and met with no Opposition till he reached the Walls of Prague.

Siege of Prague.

His Prussian Majesty arrived before the City of Prague on the 2d of September, and though his Artillery did not come up till some Time after, he attacked and carried some advanced Posts; but was soon informed that the Convoy

Convoy which guarded his Artillery had been attacked by an unexpected Party of the Austrians. On receiving this Advice, he marched immediately to their Assistance with the third Part of his Army, and found his Troops put to Flight, and the Austrians hastening away with his Cannon; a Loss which would have rendered all his Designs abortive. He fell upon the Austrians, whose Number would not admit of their contending with him, were obliged to abandon their important Conquest, and seek their Safety in their Flight. Having thus recovered his Artillery, his Majesty returned towards Prague, and after defeating General Bathiani, made himself Master of several Redoubts and Bastions erected by the French during the last Siege. Being in Possession of these Batteries, he play'd his Cannon and Mortars incessantly against the City, Part of which was soon demolished. He then ordered four Attacks to be made at once, and reduced the Besieged to such Extremities, that in fourteen Days, namely, on the 16th of September, the Governor was obliged to capitulate.

At one of the abovementioned Attacks, commanded by General Schwerin, a Grenadier mounted the Bastion alone, and defended himself with his Sword, till his Followers came to his Assistance; for which Act of Bravery, the King placed him at the Marshal's Table in his Grenadier's Habit, promoted him to the Rank of Lieutenant, and ennobled him by Patent.

On the Reduction of Prague, the King caused a Medal to be struck, on one Side of which was the Plan of the Town with this Inscription :

*Prague taken by the King of Prussia,
September 16, 1744,
For the third Time in three Years.*

And, on the other Side, a German Distich, to this Effect :

*Make Wars, O Lord, by Wars to cease;
And let this Conquest lead to Peace.*

After leaving a Garrison of six thousand Men in Prague, with a large Train of Artillery, he marched forward with the Rapidity which constitutes his Military Character, took Possession of almost all Bohemia, and began to talk of entering Austria, and besieging Vienna.

It was therefore now Time for the Austrians to abandon their Project of invading France, and apply their whole Power to their whole Defence. Accordingly Prince Charles received Orders to repass the Rhine. This the French, by their Contract with the Prussians, should have done all in their Power to hinder ; but Experience had sufficiently informed them, that the Austrians would not be beat without Resistance, and that Assistance always incommodes an Assailant, As the King of Prussia rejoiced in in the Distance of the Austrians, whom he considered as intangled in the French Territories; the French rejoiced in the Necessity of their Return, and pleased themselves with the Prospect of easy Conquests, while Powers, which they considered with equal Malevolence should be employed in massacring each other.

Prince Charles took the Opportunity of a bright Moonshine to repass the Rhine, and Marshal Noailles, who had early Intelligence of his Motions, gave him very little Disturbance, contenting himself with falling on his Rear-guard, but continued his Pursuit no farther than when they joined the main Body.

It must not, however, be supposed that the Queen was absolutely destitute of Resource during the Absence of Prince Charles. The Elector of Saxony, whether invited or not, was not comprized in the Union of Frankfort; and as every Sovereign is growing less in Proportion, as his Neighbour is growing greater, he could not heartily wish Success to a Confederacy which was to aggrandize the other Powers of Germany. The Prussians also gave him a particular and immediate Provocation to oppose them; for in their March to make a Conquest of Bohemia, they passed, with all the Elation of imaginary Success, through his Dominions, and even disdained his Authority. He was therefore, on the Approach of Prince Charles, which gave a new Prospect to Events, easily persuaded to join in an Alliance with the Queen, whom whom he furnished with a very large Body of Troops.

The King of Prussia, flattering himself that Prince Charles would not find it easy to escape out of the French Territories, pushed on his Conquests in Bohemia; but was soon informed that the Prince had repassed the Rhine, and that the French either could not, or would not overtake him.

In a short Time, Prince Charles, by Marches pressed on with the utmost Eagerness, reached Bohemia, leaving the Bavarians to regain the Possession of the wasted Plains of their Country, which their Enemies, who still kept the strong Places, might again recover whenever they pleased.

The King of Prussia, finding himself again deceived by the French, retired at the Approach of the Austrian Army, evacuating Post after Post, Town after Town, and Fortress after Fortress, without making the least Resistance.

It was indeed expected that he would have made some Effort to secure Prague; but after a faint Attempt to dispute the Passage of the Elbe, he ordered his Garrison to quit the Place immediately. This Order was executed with so much Precipitation, that they left behind them their Magazines and heavy Artillery, among which were seven Pieces of remarkable Excellence, called the Seven Electors; but took with them their Field Cannon, and a great Number of Carriages laden with Stores and Plunder, Plunder, which they were forced to abandon in their Route, the Saxons and Austrians harassing them prodigiously in their March.

The King of Prussia suffered greatly in his Retreat, for besides the military Stores, which he left every where behind him, there was a Want of Provisions in his Army, and consequently Desertions, and a long Train of Diseases.

At last he entered his own Territories, and having stationed his Troops in Places of Security, returned for a Time to Berlin, where he forbade all to speak either well or ill of the Campaign.

To what End such a Prohibition could conduce is not easy to discover, there is no Country in which Men can be forbidden to know what they know, and what is universally known may as well be spoken: Indeed in popular Governments seditious Discourses may inflame the Vulgar, but in such Governments they cannot be restrained, and in absolute Monarchies they are of little Effect. This Edict of his Prussian Majesty regarded only himself, and therefore it is difficult to tell what was his Motive, unless he intended to spare himself the Mortification of absurd and illiberal Flattery, which, to a Mind stung with Disgrace, must have been in the highest Degree painful and disgusting.

Moderation in Prosperity, is a Virtue very difficult to all Mortals; Forbearance of Revenge, when Revenge is within Reach, is scarcely ever to be found among Princes. Now was

was the Time when the Queen of Hungary might perhaps have made Peace on her own Terms; but Keeness of Resentment and Arrogance of Success, withheld her from making a proper Use of the present Opportunity. It is said that the King of Prussia, in his Retreat, sent Letters to Prince Charles, which were supposed to contain ample Concessions, but were sent back unopened. His Britannick Majesty also offered his Mediation, but his Offers were rejected at Vienna, where a Resolution was taken not only to revenge the Interruption of their Success on the Rhine, by the Recovery of Silesia, but to reward the Saxons for their seasonable Help, by giving them Part of the Prussian Dominions.

In the Beginning of the Year 1745, the Emperor Charles of Bavaria expired, the Treaty of Frankfort was consequently at an End, the King of Prussia being no longer able to maintain the Character of Auxiliary to the Emperor, and having pretended no other Cause for the War, might have honourably withdrawn his Forces, and on his own Principles have embraced the Terms of Peace: But no Terms were offered him; the Queen pursued him with the utmost Ardor of Hostility, and the French abandoned him to his own Conduct, and to his own Destiny.

Campaign

Campaign of 1745.

The Ardor on both Sides was so great, that the Troops were not suffered to lie idle in their Winter Quarters, particularly in Silesia, where the Prussians made themselves Masters of Troppau, Jagersdorf, and other Places taken by the Austrians, who were obliged to retire into Moravia.

In the Month of February the Prussians attacked the Town of Ratibor, a Place in Silesia, where the Austrians had posted Three thousand Men, and who were all either killed or made Prisoners. And in the County of Glatz, the Prussians attacked and routed Twelve thousand Austrians, killing Five hundred, and taking Five hundred Prisoners, with three Pieces of Cannon.

In the Month of April, the Elector of Bavaria, seeing his Dominions over-run by the Austrians, and receiving very little Assistance from the French, made a Peace with the Queen of Hungary on easy Conditions, and the Austrians had more Troops to employ against Prussia.

But the Revolutions of War will not suffer human Presumption to remain long unchecked. The Peace with Bavaria was hardly concluded, when the Battle of Fontenoy was lost, and all the Allies of Austria called upon her to exert her utmost Power for the Preservation of the Low Countries. And a few Days after the Loss at Fontenoy, the Battle between the Prussians and the combined Army of Austrians and Saxons, was fought at Friedburg in Silesia.

lesia, the Particulars of which are as follow.

Battle of Friedberg.

The King of Prussia, being informed the combined Army intended to enter Silesia towards the End of May, his Majesty, about the Middle of the Month, withdrew his Troops from the Upper Silesia, except the Garrison of Jagersdorf, which was left to cover the Country on that Side. Soon after he received Advice, that the Austrian Army was assembling at Konigsgratz, and that the Saxons, under the Command of Saxe-Weisenfels, were to join them there. On this he ordered the Marcgrave Charles to withdraw his Troops from the Neighbourhood of Jagersdorf, and join him at the Camp marked out at Frankenstein, which the Prussians entered the 27th of May.

The Marcgrave during his March routed a Party of Austrians, and cut in Pieces three Regiments, two of Infantry, and one of Dragoons; after which he continued his March, and joined the Royal Army on the 28th, in the Evening. Soon after the King received Advice that the Austrians were advanced to Landshut, on which he removed to the Camp of Richenback, and ordered General du Moulin, then at Schweidnitz, to do every Thing in his Power to lead the Enemy into a Belief, that the King's Design was to retreat, at their Approach, to Breslau. This Stratagem had the desired desired Effect; the Austrians and Saxons, filled with ridiculous Prejudices to the Dishonour of the Prussian Arms, easily believed they would run away from them.

- At the Enemy's Approach, the King marched with the greatest Silence between Schweidnitz and Strigau; the Vanguard, commanded by General Moulin, kept along the Sides of the Hills of Strigau, while General Nassau, with another Detachment, occupied a Wood that lay between both: All these Corps, as well as the main Body of the Army, encamped between Hills, where they could not be perceived. No Noise was suffered in the Camp, and Major-General Winterfeld was even ordered to send out small Parties, with Orders to retire at the first Motion of the Enemy; all which was done to keep up that false Security in which they were immersed.

Several successive Days were employed by the King of Prussia in reconnoitring all Places where the Enemy might advance, it not being his Intention to defend a Chain of Mountains sixteen German Leagues in Length, but to give them a warm Reception at their coming out of the Defiles.

On the third of June in the Morning, his Majesty repaired to the Camp of General die Moulin, and observed from thence, that a great Part of the Enemy's Cavalry had passed the Defiles: And in the Afternoon he saw the Enemy advancing, in large Columns of Horse and Foot, into the Plains of Friedberg and Ronstoc;

Stoc; upon which he ordered the Army to march at Eight in the Evening to Strigan, and commanded General Moulin, with forty Squadrons and seven Battalions, to take Post on the adjacent Hills. These Orders were well executed; the Army arriving about Midnight at the Posts assigned them, without Noise or Lights.

On the 4th, at Two in the Morning, the King assembled all the General Officers, and settled every Particular relative to the Battle; and in less than Half an Hour the Army moved to attack the Enemy marching in Lines, and filing off on the Right. General du Moulin, on observing some Battalions posted on a Hill in the Flank of the Army, immediately occupied another Hill facing them.

The Right of the Prussian Cavalry was formed near the Battalions commanded by the above General, by Marshal Buddenbreck and Lieutenant-General Rottenburg. Prince Trieny of Anhalt occupied, with three Battalions of Grenadiers, a small Wood on the Left of the Cavalry. The King formed his Infantry close to the Wood, but the Ground would not permit him to draw up at once more than fifteen Battalions out of thirty-two, which composed his first Line; and perceiving the Austrians drawing up over-against him, and their Cavalry advancing, he sent Orders to General Nassau to hasten with the Left Wing of the Cavalry to a Meadow, which joined a Rivulet, where the Extremity of the Left was formed; while M.
Kalckstein,

Kalckstein, General of the Foot, who commanded the second Line, caused several Battalions to advance, in order to reinforce General du Moulin.

These Dispositions being finished, Prince Leopold of Anhalt-Dessau made the first Attack upon the Saxon Infantry, posted in a marshy Wood; but the Battalion of Grenadier Guards, headed by Lieutenant-Colonel Wedel, drove them from the Marshes, without firing a single Shot. The Attack of the Cavalry on the Right succeeded that of the Infantry, and the whole Left Wing of the Enemy was routed at the same Instant. The Saxons, in order to make a good Retreat, formed a Triangle of Infantry; but Lieutenant-General Rottenburg, at the Head of the Prince of Prussia's Regiment of Cuirassiers, cut the Regiment of Schonberg in Pieces; Lieutenant-Colonel Fuschinsky of the Life-Guards, and Major Froideville, put two Troops of Saxon Grenadiers to the Sword: By which the Triangle was broken, and the Saxons totally routed.

The whole Wing being routed, the King and the Margrave Charles at the Head of the Prussian Left Wing, charged the Austrians with so much Vigour, that the Austrians every where gave Ground. In the mean Time the Right Wing advanced, and with ten Squadrons of Horse commanded by General Kyau, bore down every Thing that opposed them. Soon after the Austrians retreated by three several Ways, Ways, and left the Prussians entirely Masters of the Field of Battle. The Prussians took sixty-six Pieces of Cannon, eight Pair of Kettle Drums, six Bobitzies, seven Standards, four Generals, near two hundred Officers, and above seven thousand Men.

In Consequence of this Victory, his Prussian Majesty advanced again into Bohemia, but made no great Progress. The Queen of Hungary, though defeated, was not subdued. She poured in her Troops from all Parts to the Reinforcement of Prince Charles, and determined to continue the Struggle with all her Power. The King saw that Bohemia was an unpleasing and inconvenient Theatre of War, in which he should be ruined by a Miscarriage, and get little by a Victory. He therefore determined to turn his Arms against Saxony, now left entirely defenceless.

Accordingly he published a Declaration against the Elector of Saxony, in which, after recapitulating many unjust Proceedings of the Saxons, observed, that their Injustice in invading his Dominions, and the Protection of his own Subjects, had laid him under a Necessity of entering the Electorate of Saxony, in order to prevent the ambitious Designs of the King of Poland.

After publishing this Declaration, he immediately entered that Electorate, which drew on another Battle between the Prussians and combined Army of Austrians and Saxons.

Battle

Battle of Standentz.

The Allied Army being again joined after their Defeat at Friedberg, endeavoured to surprize that of the Prussians then encamped at Standentz near Prouchez. In order to execute this Design, they marched all Night, and attacked the Prussians at Break of Day. But notwithstanding their great Superiority in Numbers, they were entirely defeated, the Prussians charging them with such Impetuosity, that after an obstinate Fight of four Hours, they were obliged to seek their Safety in their Flight. The Prussians took nineteen Pieces of Cannon, as many Standards, and near four thousand Prisoners. The Austrians had, in the Beginning of the Action, some Advantage, and their irregular Troops, who are always daring, and always ravenous, broke into the Prussian Camp, plundered the Baggage belonging to the King, and principal Officers, and carried off the military Chest. But this was easily repaired by the Spoils of Saxony.

The Queen of Hungary was still inflexible, and hoped that Fortune would at last change. She recruited once more her Army, and prepared to invade the Territories of Brandenburg in three Places at once; but the King of Prussia's Activity prevented all her Designs, by transferring the Seat of the War from his own Dominions to those of Saxony, by marching through Upper Mesnia, cutting in Pieces four Regiments Regiments of Saxon Horse, and obliging the Duke of Lorrain to retire precipitately into Bohemia. At the same Time another Part of his Forces seized Leipsic; and the Elector of Saxony, to avoid the Storm, left his Capital, and retired into Bohemia.

Battle of Dresden.

While the Prussians were employed in this Manner, the Saxon Generals drew together all the Troops in their Power, and being joined by a Detachment of Austrian Cavalry, commanded by Prince Lobkowitz, made a Stand between Dresden and Pirna: The Prussian General, trusting to the Goodness of his Troops, attacked them, though double his Number, and obtained a complete Victory, killing great Numbers, and taking four thousand Prisoners, with all their Artillery. The King of Prussia, as a Conqueror, exacted very large Contributions from the whole Country, and the Austrians and Saxons were at last compelled to receive from him such a Peace as he thought proper to grant. He however imposed no severe Conditions, except in the Payment of the Contributions, made no new Claim of Dominions, and, with the Elector-Palatine, acknowledged the Duke of Tuscany for Emperor.

Peace being thus re-established, his Prussian Majesty applied himself to cultivate the Commerce of his Subjects, and settle other useful Regula-

Regulations, till he was again obliged to appear in Arms for the Defence of his Country.

In the Month of January 1756, a Treaty was concluded between his Britannick Majesty and the King of Prussia, and this furnished the Court of Vienna with a Pretence for forming an Alliance with the Court of Versailles, in which, however, it had a much farther View, and which it had been watching an Opportunity to effect. In Consequence of this Alliance, Treaties were drawn up between the Courts of Vienna and Versailles, under the Name of Treaties of Friendship and Neutrality, and to these Treaties the neighbouring Powers were formally invited to accede; in the mean Time the most solemn Assurances were made by the contracting Powers, that they had no other View than to preserve the general Tranquility of Europe, and prevent the Flames of War that had been kindled between Great Britain and France from spreading to other Countries. But notwithstanding these Declarations, the King of Prussia soon discovered that the principal End proposed by the Empress in this Alliance, was the Recovery of Silesia, in which France concurred, because it was equally her Interest to reduce his Power; he saw that with this View a Minister from Vienna was sent to Petersburg, and that a Minister from Versailles was to follow; and he knew that as his Power was equally obnoxious to them all, it was probable they would readily concur in any Project to distress him. A very short

short Time convinced him that his Conjectures were true, and he received certain Intelligence, early in the Spring, that the Two Imperial Powers had agreed upon a Plan to unite their Forces, and attack his Dominions. In this Situation he took every Measure that could be suggested by the utmost Vigilance and Magnanimity, and the Russians having soon after begun to march against him, he dispatched a Body of Troops sufficient to repel them towards Pomerania. The Designs of both Parties were now more apparent ; the Empress Queen published a Rescript, to justify the Motion of her Troops ; in which she represented the Treaty between Prussia and England, in such a Light, as reflected Dishonour upon both.

In answer to this Rescript, the King of Great Britain caused the following Declaration to be made by his Electoral Minister, at the Diet of the Empire.

“ That his Britannick Majesty, in his Quality of Elector of Brunswick Lunenburg, has heard, with great Surprise, that some People have affected to put a wrong Construction on the Object of the Treaty of Friendship, which he concluded some Time ago with the King of Prussia, and that they have even endeavoured to represent it as a Matter wherein the State of Religion was concerned ; that nevertheless, the whole Empire knows, he has made it a Rule to support the Rights of each, without any Distinction

" tion of Persons ; to maintain Justice ; to " enforce the Execution of the Laws and Con" stitutions of the Empire ; to protect its Li" berties and the publick Peace ; and to con" tribute to keep up in the Germanick Body,
 " such a System as appeared most conducive " to its Safety. That in Consequence of " these Principles, he has neglected nothing
 " that might most effectually tend to the Sup" port of the House of Austria, even to the
 " being ready to sacrifice all that was in his " Power. That the Differences which have " arisen between Great Britain and France,
 " about their Possessions in America, have given
 " Birth to a Design in the latter Power to " attack the Electoral Dominions of the House
 " of Brunswick Lunenburgh ; which was suffi" ciently known by the little Care they took
 " to make a Mystery of such a Project, so ca" pable of creating Troubles in the Empire ;
 " his Britannick Majesty, who address'd him" self to the Empress Queen, requiring the " Succours stipulated by Treaties, was not
 " only unable to obtain them, but, at the same " Time, found the Court of Vienna as little
 " inclined to grant another Request, altoge" ther as reasonable ; which was, to employ
 " her good Offices towards altering the Dis-
 " positions of such of the States of the Em" pire, as, through Indifference, seemed to " favour, in some Measure, that intended In" vasion : That his Britannick Majesty thereby
 " found himself under a Necessity of concluding an Alliance with the King of Prussia, for the Security of their respective Dominions, as also for preserving Peace and Tranquillity in the Empire, protecting the System established therein, and defending the Rights and Privileges of the Members of the Germanick Body ; without any Prejudice to either of the Religions exercised in the Empire, the Contracting Parties having had no Views in that Treaty but such as are perfectly consistent with those salutary Objects.

That while Matters stood thus, the World was surpris'd with the unexpected Event of the Treaty of Alliance which her Majesty, the Empress Queen, has been pleas'd to conclude with a Potentate, who, for above two Centuries past, has dismembered the most considerable Provinces of the Empire ; has attacked and invaded her Arch-ducal House ; has fomented Troubles and Divisions in our dear Country, and made such Means subservient to her own ambitious Views, by usurping whatever lay convenient for her ; that the Inconveniencies and Dangers which this new Treaty must necessarily be productive of, will, in Time, be made manifest ; and as the Thing is not of such a Nature as to require that one should any longer make a Mystery of it, his Britannick Majesty has thought it proper to explain himself clearly on this Head, in order to dissipate the Prejudices which may

“ may have been created by contrary Ideas or “ Suggestions, &c.

“ Soon after his Britannick Majesty had made this Declaration, the King of Prussia drew up his Answer to the Imperial Rescript, as follows :

“ The King of Prussia was greatly surpris’d
 “ to hear that the Empress Queen endeavour“ ed to persuade the Publick, that he had gi“ ven Occasion to the great Military Prepara“ tions which were making in her Dominions.
 “ To discover the Falsity of this Charge, it will “ be sufficient to observe the Æras when the “ Motions among the Forces of each Party “ began.

“ It is notorious that the Court of Vienna
 “ began her Armaments in Bohemia and Mo- “ ravia in the Beginning of June, soon after
 “ it had contracted new Engagements with “ France, and at a Time when neither the “ Empress Queen nor any of her Allies, had “ any Ground to apprehend a Surprize. His “ Prussian Majesty had the greater Reason to “ be attentive to these Dispositions, as he re“ ceived Advice at the same Time of the “ March of a considerable Body of Russian “ Troops towards Courland; which determin’d
 “ him to order a few Regiments to advance
 “ into Pomerania; but he order’d them to halt
 “ as soon as he heard that the Russians had “ march’d back. The present Armaments

“ must be ascribed with a very ill Grace to “ this Motion of the Prussian Forces ; since
 “ the March of some Prussian Regiments to“ wards Pomerania, ought naturally to give
 “ the Court of Vienna no more Umbrage,
 “ than the March of some Austrian Regiments “ towards Tuscany would give the King of “ Prussia.

“ Whilst the Preparations for War were “ carrying on with the utmost Vigour in “ Bohemia and Moravia, his Prussian Ma“ jesty contented himself with putting his “ Fortresses in Silesia in a Posture of Defence “ against a sudden Attack, and marching
 “ some Regiments towards his Provinces in “ Westphalia. To this Day he hath not sent
 “ a single Regiment into Silesia, no Garrison
 “ hath marched out to take the Field, no
 “ Camp is formed, nor has he made any “ Motion towards the Territories of the “ Empress Queen. To prove this, we will “ venture to appeal to the Testimony of the “ Court of Vienna itself, which in its circular “ Rescript alledges only uncertain Reports
 “ that have been contradicted by the Event.
 “ They were informed (they say) that the “ Prussian Troops were to encamp on the “ Frontiers of Bohemia and Moravia, and that
 “ the Places of Encampment were already fix“ ed on. But nothing of all this has hitherto “ appeared.

“ Notwithstanding the Tranquility of the “ King of Prussia, the Empress Queen hath “ con-

 “ dered Troops to advance from her most “ distant Provinces, and by her own Acknow“ ledgment she hath assembled a formidable “ Army in Bohemia and Moravia. On Sight
 “ of these Motions executed on the Fron“ tiers of Silesia, the King of Prussia found “ himself obliged to demand of the Court of “ Vienna, by his Minister Mr. de Klinggraff,
 “ a friendly and sincere Explanation with re“ gard to these Military Preparations. But
 “ the Answer given was so dry, ambiguous,
 “ and unsatisfactory, that it gave his Majesty
 “ a Suspicion of a Design formed against his “ Dominions ; especially as the Preparations
 “ in Bohemia and Moravia were continued,
 “ and even doubled, and not only Camps were “ formed, but Lines drawn across the Fron“ tiers of Silesia, as in a Time of open War.
 “ Things being in this Situation, it was na“ tural for the King of Prussia to think of “ himself, and no Person can justly blame
 “ him for taking Measures to avoid being “ surpris’d and crush’d in his own Terri“ tories.

“ The Court of Vienna is challenged to “ point out any other Object of the King
 “ of Prussia’s Armaments, but the Defence
 “ and Security of his Dominions. As to the “ present Conduct of the Imperial Court, it “ is easy for the impartial Publick to find a “ Key to it, by combining the Æra of its “ first Armaments with what it so industri-

“ ously gives out, namely, that they are no “ less designed to provide for the Security of “ its Dominions, than to fulfil its Engage“ ments with its Allies. Whatever may be
 “ in this, Peace and War are in the Power “ of the Empress Queen. The King of “ Prussia, not being satisfied with her first “ Answer, ordered M. Klinggraff, his Mini“ ster, to demand a categorical Explanation
 “ from that Princess. If her Imperial Maje“ sty’s pacific Intentions be really as pure and “ sincere as she assures them in all Places to “ be, it will be easy for her to convince the “ King of Prussia thereof: She need only “ give his Minister a clear, precise Declara“ tion, free from all Ambiguity and Equivo“ cation, which will effectually restore the “ publick Tranquility.

“ We are willing to believe, on the As“ surances of her Majesty the Empress Queen,
 “ that her late Treaty with his Most Christian “ Majesty contains no other Articles but “ what have been published; and we promise
 “ ourselves, from the Integrity of her Im“ perial Majesty, that she will agree to no
 “ Project that may be contrary to the Inte“ rests of Protestantism. But she cannot take “ it amiss that the Protestant Princes should “ be upon their Guard in such a critical
 “ Conjunction as the present, when the Va“ lidity of the Act of Security given by the “ hereditary Prince of Hesse-Cassel, for main“ taining the established Religion, is openly “ attack-

“ attacked, and a Discovery has been made of “ the secret Intrigues of Count Pergen, the “ Emperor’s Minister, and of Baron Kurtz-
 “ rock, to carry off that Prince, and take him
 “ from under the Authority of the Landgrave
 “ of Hesse-Cassel, his Father ; who hath pub“ lickly complained thereof, but obtained no
 “ Satisfaction, &c.”

This Answer was presented by the Prussian Minister at the Court of Vienna : And almost at the same Time her Imperial Majesty received the News of the Invasion of Saxony. Such is the Rapidity with which his Prussian Majesty plans and executes his Projects. He saw clearly the Designs formed against him, and he saw as clearly the Necessity of removing the Calamities of War from his own Kingdom into that of his Enemy. His Prussian Majesty, however, caused a Memorial to be delivered to the Empress Queen, subsequent to the March of his Troops, in which he offers immediately to recall them, if she will solemnly declare that his Dominions shall not be invaded. In Answer to this Memorial her Majesty has caused another to be delivered to the King of Prussia, in which she has evaded the categorical Answer which he required. His Prussian Majesty therefore continues his Progress, and the particular Motives of his Conduct towards the Court of Saxony will best appear from what follows.

The 29th of August, Mr. de Malzahn, the Prussian Minister, having demanded a private
 D 5 Audience

Audience of the King of Poland, made the following verbal Declaration to his Majesty on the Part of the King his Master :

“ His Majesty the King of Prussia finds “ himself obliged, by the Behaviour of the “ Empress Queen, to attack her, and to “ march through the Territories of Saxony
 “ into Bohemia : He accordingly demands a Pas“ sage through the Electoral Dominions of his “ Polish Majesty, declaring, that he will cause
 “ his Troops to observe the strictest Disci“ pline, and take all the Care of the Country “ that the Circumstances will permit. His “ Polish Majesty, and his Royal Family, may
 “ at the same Time depend upon being in “ perfect Safety, and of having the greatest “ Respect paid them on the Part of his Prus- “ sian Majesty. As to the rest, after reflect“ ing upon the Events of the Year 1744, there “ is no Reason to be surpris'd that the King of “ Prussia should take such Measures as may “ prevent a Return of what then happened.
 “ Moreover, he desires nothing so much as a “ speedy Re-establishment of Peace, in order
 “ to give him the happy Opportunity of resto“ ring the King of Poland to the quiet Posses“ sion of his Dominions, against which he has “ not, in other Respects, formed any dange“ rous Designs.”

M. de Malzahn added, “ That the Necessi“ sity which the King his Master was under
 “ of acting in this Manner, could only be “ imputed to the Calamity of the Times,
 “ and

“ and the Behaviour of the Court of Vienna.”

The King in the Surprize which this Declaration threw him into, answered M. de Malzahn.

“ That he should not have expected a Requisition in the Form that it had just been made to him ; that being at Peace with all the World, and under no Engagement relative to the present Object with any of the Powers actually at War, or those about to enter into it, he could not conceive the End of making such a Declaration ; but that he should give an Answer upon this Subject in Writing, and hoped his Prussian Majesty, contenting himself with a quiet Passage, would neither forget the Respect due to a Sovereign, nor that which all the Members of the Germanick Body reciprocally owe to each other.”

Soon after this verbal Answer, the King caused the following to be delivered in Writing to M. de Malzahn.

His Majesty the King of Poland, who desires nothing more ardently than the Peace of the Roman Empire, was extremely displeased to hear that some Differences had arisen between the King of Prussia and the Empress Queen, which might occasion the Prussian Troops to enter Bohemia. Nevertheless, as the Request has been made by his Prussian Majesty, the King of Poland will not refuse the Passage of those Troops through his Dominions, minions, provided they do no Damage there, and for this his Polish Majesty relies upon the Declaration of the King of Prussia, that his Troops shall observe a strict Discipline. But on this Account it is necessary, and good Order requires, that his Prussian Majesty should previously make known at what Time, through what Place, and in what Number, his Troops are to pass, in order that the King of Poland may appoint Commissaries, and give them proper Instructions to direct the Troops in their March.

“ The King, at the same Time, flatters “ himself, that the King of Prussia, as a “ Friend and good Neighbour, will pay a “ Regard to the bad Situation of the Coun“ try, and the Scarcity occasioned by the in“ different Harvest this Year; and that there“ fore he will cause ready Money, and a Mar“ ket Price, to be paid for every Thing that “ his Troops may have Occasion for, and like“ wise that he will let their Stay be as short as “ possible.

“ His Polish Majesty owns, that he can“ not help being surpris'd at his Prussian “ Majesty's observing in his Declaration, that “ the Reflection of what happened in the “ Year 1744, should occasion his taking “ Measures against the like Events; the Dif“ ference of the Situation of Affairs at that “ Time and now, being very great. The “ King has the strongest Reasons to keep “ stedfastly to the Treaty of Dresden, in Con“ formity

" formity to which he has assiduously ap" plied himself to cultivate the Friendship of " the neighbouring Powers; and it is upon
 " this Principle that his Polish Majesty flat-
 " ters himself, that the King of Prussia will " rest satisfied of his Intention, not to take " any Part in the Differences which have a" risen between his Prussian Majesty and the " Empress Queen, as he has already several " Times declared to the Prussian Minister,
 " and confirms by these Presents.

" Such strong Assurances as these cannot but " satisfy the King of Prussia, and prevent his
 " requiring any Thing of his Polish Majesty
 " or his Subjects, contrary to the Liberty of
 " a Prince of the Empire, or that should ob-
 " lige him to have Recourse to the *Germa-
 " nick* Body, and the Guarantees of the Trea" ties of Peace, for the due Execution of those
 " Treaties."

When these Declarations were communicated to the different Powers whom his Polish Majesty thought proper to acquaint with his Situation, his Majesty also informed them,
 " That being in Hopes that his Declarations
 " would make a favourable Impression upon
 " the King of Prussia, he was waiting for their " Success, when he learnt that the Prussian
 " Troops had entered his Electorate: That " finding it would be dangerous for him to " stay in his Capital, he had thought proper
 " to retire from thence, in order to join his
 " Army, and wait with his Troops for fu" ture

“ ture Events, trusting in the Divine Provi“ dence, and being persuaded that the Powers
 “ of Europe will do Justice to the Uprightness
 “ of the Principles upon which he regulated
 “ his Conduct, in an Event which must “ have surprized all Europe, as well as his “ Majesty.

Besides Lord Stormont, the British Minister, who went on the Part of the King of Poland to wait upon the King of Prussia with the above Declaration, his Polish Majesty likewise sent the Count de Salmout, one of his Ministers. His Prussian Majesty received them very politely, heard their Proposals, and told them, “ That he himself wished for nothing “ more than to find the King of Poland’s “ Sentiments acquiesce with his Declarations :
 “ That the Neutrality which his Polish Ma“ jesty seemed desirous to observe, was ex“ actly what he required of him ; but that in “ order to render this Neutrality more secure,
 “ and less liable to Variation, it would be “ proper for his Polish Majesty to separate “ his Army, and send the Troops he had “ assembled at Pirna back into their Quarters ;
 “ that a Step of this Nature would be a full “ Proof of a Neutrality not to be doubted of ;
 “ and that after this, he should take a Plea“ sure in shewing, by an equal Condescension,
 “ his Disposition to give real Marks of his “ Friendship for his Polish Majesty and con“ cert with him what Measures might be “ proper

“ proper to be taken according to the Situation of Affairs.”

In the mean Time the Queen of Hungary prevailed upon the Empress of Russia, of which the following are the principal Conditions:

1. Her Imperial Majesty engages to employ all her Forces, whensoever it shall be required, to enforce the Execution of what is by that Treaty stipulated.—2. The King of France guaranties to the Empress of Russia in Perpetuity, the Order of Succession, as she has established it in Favour of her Nephew, the Duke of Holstein, and his Descendants, promising to perform that Guaranty as well by his good Offices, as by giving all necessary Assistance.—3. The King guaranties to the Empress all her Conquests made in Sweden, in such Manner as never to support any Claims which may at any Time hereafter be made thereto.—4. The two contracting Powers shall, as far as in them lies, contribute to support the Archducal House of Austria, and to secure the Indivisibility of her Estate, as settled by the Pragmatick Sanction.—5. The Empress engages to assist both or either of the Parties, if the Case requires it, with thirty thousand Men, when a Requisition thereof shall be made.—6. When Providence shall inspire one of the Parties at War with a Desire of Peace, and Proposals for an Accommodation shall be made, the three Powers shall unite and act in Concert in laying the improveable Foundations of a solid Peace; and employ for

for that End all their Forces, as well as all their Mediation.—7. The King and the Empress shall conclude a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation, to the reciprocal Advantage of their Subjects; for which Purpose a Tariff shall be drawn up, as was done in the Time of Peter the Great.—8. The End of the contracting Powers being to prevent the Fire of War already burning between Great Britain and France from spreading any farther, they will use their best Offices with the King of Prussia to accommodate the Differences which subsist between him and the Court of Vienna.—9. And as it is necessary for the Re-establishment and Preservation of Peace, that the Grand Signior should be encouraged in his pacifick Sentiments, the contracting Powers shall study to maintain a good Understanding with him.

Such was the Situation of Affairs about the Middle of the Year 1756, when his Prussian Majesty being fully convinced that he must have Recourse to Arms, he did not waste the Time in fruitless Negotiations, but pursued the only Method he had left of securing his Dominions, and disappointing the ambitious Views of his Enemies.

Campaign of 1756.

It appearing from the Behaviour of the Court of Vienna that War was determined upon, the King took all possible Precautions for making the

the most proper Resistance. And accordingly he conferred the chief Command of the Army, destined to act in Prussia, on Marshal Lehwald, and of that in Silesia on Marshal Schwerin, reserving the principal Command of the principal Army, which was intended to act in Saxony and Bohemia, for himself.

For some Years the Intrigues of the Court of Saxony had been no Secret, her political Schemes, and military Projects had transpired, and it was well known that the Saxon Generals had pitched upon the important Post of Pirna for the general Rendezvous of their Troops, as the most convenient either for deceiving the Prussians, in Case they attempted to march into Bohemia, or for receiving Succours from the Austrians.

The Saxons, on the first Motion of the Prussian Troops for marching into Pomerania, or, in Case of Necessity, for joining Marshal Lehwald, abandoned all their Garrisons bordering on Brandenburg, and took Post between the Moldau and the Elbe. They afterwards returned to their Quarters; and a second Time broke up, and repaired to their respective Cantonments. But his Prussian Majesty, being no Stranger to the Motive on which they acted, took proper Measures, and marched with his Troops divided into three Columns towards Pirna. The first set out for the Dutchy of Magdeburgh, under the Command of Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, directing their Route by Leipsic, Borna, Kem- neitz,

neitz, and Freyberg, to Cotta. The second, with the King at their Head, marched through Pretsch, Torgau, Lönkswitz, Wildstruß, Dresden and Zeitz. The third, commanded by the Prince of Brunswick Bevern, crossing Lusatia, took their Route through Elsterwarde, Bautzen, Stolpe, to Lobma.

These three Columns arrived on the very same Day at the Camp of Pirna, which they invested. But before we proceed to relate the subsequent Facts, it will be necessary to give a short Description of the Post of Pirna.

The Post joined on the Right to the Fortress of Sonnenstein; on the Left to that of Konningstein. The Front was inaccessible; Nature in this extraordinary Spot seems to have delighted in forming a Fortress without the Assistance of Art. If you imagine a craggy Rock in some Parts covered with vast Pine-trees, of which the Saxons had felled great Numbers, you will have a tolerable Idea of the Place. The Elbe flows behind Sonnenstein and Pirna, amidst inaccessible Rocks.

The Prussians, soon after their Encampment round this Spot, perceived, that notwithstanding the Inferiority of the Saxon Army, the advantageous Situation of the Ground was so great, that it could not be attacked without considerable Loss. It was therefore determined to turn the Siege into a Blockade, and to treat the Saxon Army rather as a Town besieged, than the Encampment of an Army.

The

The Saxons, on the other hand, did all in their Power to induce the Prussians to proceed on their March, and leave them behind without attacking them. But former Experience had taught the Prussians Wisdom, with regard to future Transactions. If, on one hand, no Attack was thought advisable; so on the other, no Enemy was to be left behind. They also resolved to leave an Army of Observation, in order to prevent the Saxons from receiving any Succours from the Austrians.

In Consequence of these Resolutions, the Prussians took Possession of the Posts of Leopoldsham, Marckersdorf, Hellendorf, Hennersdorf, Cotta, Zehest, and Sedlitz, as far as the Elbe, where they had a Communication with the Posts of Lohm, Welen, Obreswaden, and Schandau, by Means of a Bridge; and in these different Places they distributed twenty-eight Battalions, and thirty Squadrons.

The rest of the Army, consisting of twenty-nine Battalions and seventy Squadrons, took the Route of Bohemia, which they entered by Detachments, moving to Peterswalde, Aufig, and Fonsdorf. This Body was commanded by Marshal Keith, by whose Orders General Manstein made himself Master of the Castle of Ketschen, taking an hundred Austrians Prisoners. The Marshal encamped at Fonsdorf, where he continued till the End of the Month.

Hitherto Marshal Brown had kept close in his Camp at Collin; M. de Piccolomini lay at Konigsgratz, and Marshal Schwerin, after passing fining through the Country of Glatz, had advanced to Nacot, afterwards to the Banks of the Mettaw, and lastly to Auget; where he routed a Detachment of Hussars and Dragoons, commanded by General Bacof, and took two hundred Prisoners. Afterwards the Marshal took Possession of the Camp at Aujeft, and foraged even to the Walls of Konigsgratz.

Towards the End of September it was known that Marshal Brown had received Orders to disengage the Saxons. His Army was encamped at Buden, near the Conflux of the Egra with the Elbe; and for executing these Orders he had the Choice of three Ways; one by attacking and defeating Marshal Keith's Army, which was no easy Task; the second by marching to the Left through Bilin and Toeplitz to enter Saxony, which would expose his Flank to the Rear of the Prussian Army, and endanger the Loss of his Magazines at Budin and Welfern; the third by sending a Detachment thro' Leumeritz, and proceeding to the Saxons by the Way of Boehmisch-Leipe, and Schandau. The Method could not produce any Thing decisive, the Ground in the Neighbourhood of Schandau and Ober-Raden being so difficult, that a small Body of Troops may stop a numerous Army.

The King of Prussia judged, however, that in so critical a Moment, his Presence might be necessary in Bohemia. Accordingly he left the Camp at Sedlitz, on the 28th, and the same Day reached the Camp at Jonsdorf. On the 29th 29th the Army in Bohemia was ordered to march; the King going before with eight Battalions and thirty Squadrons, encamped at Timitz, where the Scouts of the Army brought Advice, that Marshal Brown was the next Day to pass the Egra.

Battle of Lowositz.

Things being in this Situation, the Prussian Army was ordered to march nearer to the Enemy, in order to observe their Motions, and awe them by appearing always ready for Action. On the 30th all the Troops followed the King in two Columns; but the Van had scarce gained the Height of Bascopol, when they perceived a Camp in the Plains of Lowositz, its Right joining the Elbe and Wilbota, Lowositz in its Front, and Solowitz on its Left, the Extremity of which was extended behind the Ponds of Sckirkowitz. The Van continued its March to Welmina, a Village situated in a Bottom surrounded by Mountains, most of which are in the Form of a Sugar-Loaf.

The King ordered the Foot to advance with all possible Dispatch, occupy the Heights, and take Possession of all the Passes leading into the Plain of Lowositz. The Army not arriving till very late, remained all Night in Columns, at a small Distance from the Vanguard.

The

The next Day, being the first of October, the King sent at Day-break to reconnoitre the Enemy; but a thick Fog on the Plain prevented any clear Observation of Objects from the Eminences. The Town of Lowositz appeared as through a Crape, and in the Plain, between that Town and Sulowitz, two Columns of Cavalry were perceived, each consisting of about five Squadrons. It was now determined to draw up the Army, and immediately one Column of Infantry formed on the Right, the other on the Left, and the Cavalry composed a second Line. The Ground on which the Prussians formed in Order of Battle, would contain only the six Squadrons of the Van, the Ground continuing to widen towards the Left.

The Declivity of these Mountains was covered with Vineyards, divided into a great Number of small Inclosures by Stone Walls about three Feet high, as belonging to different Persons. In these Vineyards Marshal Brown posted his Pandours, in order to stop the Prussians; so that as every Battalion entered the Line, it was obliged to engage the Enemy. But the Austrian Fire being faint and unsteady, the Prussians were persuaded that Marshal Brown was retreated, and that the Pandours and Bodies of Cavalry seen in the Plain were his Rear.

This Opinion seemed confirmed from the Impossibility of seeing any Appearance of an Army. The Fog hid every Thing, and did not clear up till past Eleven. Orders were given given for cannonading the Cavalry in the Plain, upon which it several Times altered its Form. Sometimes it appeared numerous; sometimes drawn up Chequer-ways; sometimes in three contiguous Lines; at sometimes five or six Troops filed off to the Left, and disappeared.

The Prussians, weary at last with such trifling, concluded that by ordering twenty Squadrons of their Horse to charge, this Rear-guard would be dispersed, and an End put to the Action. Accordingly the Dragoons having formed at the Bottom of the Foot of the Eminence where the Infantry was posted, charged, and broke the Austrian Horse; but received a Flank Fire from the Infantry in Lowositz and Sulowitz, which obliged them to return to their Post at the Foot of the Mountain. Before this they did not apprehend, that the Austrians were facing them with all their Forces.

The King was then for placing the Cavalry behind the second Line; but before this Order could be brought, prompted by their natural Impetuosity, and a Desire of signifying themselves, charged a second Time, bore down all Opposition, passed through the same Flank Fire as before, pursued the Enemy above three hundred Paces, and, in the Excess of Ardour, crossed a Ditch ten Feet wide. Behind this Ditch, at the Distance of three hundred Paces, was another, behind which appeared the Austrian Infantry, drawn up in Order of Battle. Sixty Pieces of Cannon immediately immediately played on the Prussian Horse, which therefore repassed the Ditch, and returned to the Infantry at the Foot of the Mountain. The King would not admit of any more such Sallies, and therefore ordered the Cavalry to post itself in the Rear of the Infantry.

About this Time the Fire on the Left Wing began to increase. Marshal Brown had successively brought on twenty Battalions, which, passing by Lowositz, lined the Banks of the Elbe to support the Pandours in the Vineyards, where the Prussian Infantry briskly drove them from one Wall to another; and continuing to pursue them, several in their Flight threw themselves into the Elbe. At the same Time another Body sheltered themselves in the Houses of Lowositz, and, at first, made a Shew of defending them. The second Line of Prussian Infantry being mixed with the first, the Left extended itself to the Elbe, and in this Manner marched to attack the Austrians in Lowositz. The Grenadiers fired into the Houses through the Doors, Windows and Roofs, and then set them on Fire.

In this Action, though only the Attack of a Post, each Soldier of the Left Wing fired ninety Shot. They had no more Powder nor Bullets for their Cannon, notwithstanding which, the Regiment of Itzenbletz, and Manteufel entered Lowositz, with their Bayonets fixed, driving before them nine fresh Austrian Battalions, which Marshal Brown had just posted posted there. The Battle concluded with a disorderly Flight of the Austrians.

Marshal Brown seeing the Confusion of his Troops, took the whole Left Wing of his Infantry, which had not been attacked, and with them covered his broken Squadrons, which were flying in the utmost Confusion. In this Order he waited for the Approach of Night to retreat. Accordingly about Midnight he began his March towards his Camp at Budin, breaking down all his Bridges over the Egra.

The next Day the Prince of Bevern was detached with eight thousand Men to Schirkowitz, from whence he sent out Scouts on all Sides to reconnoitre the Passes.

This Battle lasted seven Hours, during which the Cannonading was incessant on both Sides; notwithstanding which the Loss of the Prussians was only six hundred and fifty three killed, eight hundred wounded, and about two hundred and forty nine Prisoners; but that of the Austrians more than triple the Number.

The Prussian Army encamped on the Field of Battle, where it continued without Molestation, foraging even within Cannon Shot of the Enemy's Army, few or no Austrians appearing.

Account of taking the whole Saxon Army.

On the sixth of October the Prussians received Advice, that Marshal Brown had made a Detachment, in which was his own Regiment ; and that these Troops had moved to Raudnitz, and were advancing still nearer to the Saxon Army ; also that this Body consisted of six thousand Men. Though the Weakness of this Detachment could cause little Apprehension, it was thought that the Prussian Army in Saxony, consisting only of thirteen Squadrons, might want a Reinforcement of Horse ; especially if the Saxons should attempt to force the Pass of Hellendorf, where the Cavalry might be usefully employ'd, especially in the Plains of Peterswalde. These Considerations determined the King to go thither in Person. Accordingly, setting out from Lowesitz, on the thirteenth, with fifteen Squadrons of Dragoons, he arrived at his other Army on the fourteenth at Noon.

He found, that since the tenth great Alterations had happened in the Camp at Pirna ; and that the Saxons had that Day attempted to throw a Bridge over the River Wilstead. Near the Place where the Saxons made this Attempt was a Redoubt, from whence the Prussians fired on their Boats, seven or eight of which were taken, and several sunk ; so that they were obliged to abandon their Design. On this the Saxons altered their Measures, and finding it impossible to transport their Boats on the Elbe, where they had the Fire of three Prussian Redoubts to pass, they loaded them on Horses, and carried them in that Manner by Land to a Place called Koningstein, opposite to the Village of Halbstædtel.

This

This Part of their Camp had long excited the Attention of the Saxons, as being the most proper Place for receiving the Succours they expected from the Austrian Army.

But before we proceed farther, it will be necessary to give a short Description of this Part of the Country, in order to render the ensuing Part of the Narrative more easy to be understood.

We have already observed that the Post of Pinna is remarkably fortified by Nature; but then it has this Defect, namely, that it is as difficult to come out of it, as to force it; accordingly, the Situation of the Ground would admit the Saxons only to force a Passage by Hermisdorf and Hellendorf; and this would doubtless have been attended with a very great Loss, though there was a Probability of saving, by this Attempt, a Part, at least, of the Army. They were certainly ignorant of the Situation of Habstadt, Burgursdorf, Zeigenruck, Schandau, as well as with the Disposition of the Prussians in these Posts.

General Leschwitz, with eleven Battalions, and fifteen Squadrons, were posted between Schandau, and a small Village in that Neighbourhood; and opposite to him, in two other Villages, Marshal Brown was encamped with his Detachment; but Leschwitz was much stronger than Brown; and impracticable Rocks hindered the Austrians from advancing to Burgursdorf, and from thence to Alstadt, where the Saxons intended to pass the River at a small Plain, in the Center of which is a steep Mountain, called Lilienstein. On each Side of this Mountain five Battalions of Grenadiers were drawn up in the Form of a Crescent, and guarded a strong Barricado of felled Trees. Behind them, at the Distance of five hundred Paces, two Brigades of Foot were placed in the Defile of Burgursdorf, supported by five Squadrons of Dragoons. Behind this Defile is Ziegunruck, a perpendicular Rock, sixty Feet high. This Rock forms a Semicircle round these difficult Posts, joining at each Extremity to the Elbe.

At this inconvenient Place it was, however, that the Saxons began, on the eleventh, to form their Bridge, which the Prussians suffered them to finish without any Molestation. The Descent from Tirmsdorf towards the Elbe, is tolerably practicable ; but when they had finished their Bridge, the great Difficulty of climbing up the Rock remained, from whence they could go only by one Foot Path to Anstældel. They, however, began their March on the twelfth in the Evening ; and, with infinite Difficulty, two Battalions of Grenadiers got on the other Side.

On the nineteenth this Road was entirely destroyed by the continual Rains ; so that there was no Possibility of getting their Cannon from their Intrenchments, and accordingly they left them behind. Soon after their Cavalry, Baggage, and Rear found themselves confusedly embarrasled, one being stopped by another.

The

The Difficulty of the Passage thus hindering the March of the Troops, the Van could only file off one by one, whilst the main Body and the Rear were obliged to remain motionless in the same Place.

On the thirteenth, very early in the Morning, Prince Maurice of Anhalt, received the first Advice of the Saxon Retreat; and immediately the Prussian Troops marched in seven Columns; and it was not without great Difficulty that they climbed those Rocks, though they met with no Opposition. As soon as they had gained the Heights, they formed; and their Hussars falling on the four Squadrons which formed the Rear Guard of the Saxons, drove them to their Infantry near Tirmsdorf; while the Independent Companies of Hunters, lodging themselves in a Wood on the Flank of these Troops, exceedingly galled them with their Fire.

At the same Time Prince Maurice ordered the Foot Regiment of Prussia to advance on an Eminence to the Right of the Saxons; and two Pieces of Cannon being brought to play on their Rear Guard, a general Flight ensued. The Hussars threw themselves on the Baggage of the Army and plundered it; and the Hunters conveyed themselves into the Woods near the Elbe; from whence they galled the Rear Guard in its Retreat.

The Saxons now lost all Presence of Mind, and cut down their Bridge, which was carried by the Current to the Post of Raden. The Prussian Army encamped on the Eminence of Struppen, its Left extending to the Elbe, and its Right along a large hollow Way terminating near Hennerdorf.

Such was the Situation of the Prussian, Saxon, and Austrian Troops, when the King of Prussia arrived on the fourteenth, with his Dragoons, at the Camp of Struppen. The Saxons depended on the Austrians making a vigorous Effort to relieve them ; while, on the other Hand, the Austrians waited for a certain Signal to begin the Attack, which was never given. Thus were the Saxons entirely surrounded, and so close pent up by insurmountable Precipices, that it was impossible for them to make any Attempt for their Deliverance ; and Marshal Brown perceiving the Danger of his own Situation, retreated, on the 14th, toward Bohemia ; but Warneri, with his Hussars, fell upon the Rear of the Austrians, consisting of three hundred Hussars, and two hundred Pandours, entirely routed them ; so that the Hungarian Infantry was put to the Sword.

The King of Poland, who was then at Pirna, seeing his Army in such a Situation, that it was impossible to force a Passage with the Sword, and at the same Time destitute both of Provisions, and all Hopes of Succours, permitted his Troops to surrender themselves Prisoners of War. And the King of Poland being himself desirous of retiring into his Kingdom, was supplied by his Prussian Majesty with Horses, both in Saxony and the other

other Parts of the Prussian Dominions, through which he was to pass; and had the same Regard paid to his Person, as crowned Heads reciprocally receive towards each other in the most profound Peace.

On the sixteenth, the Capitulation being finished, the Saxon Army marched out, and was conducted to the Prussian Camp, where the greatest Part of the Soldiers entered, and the Officers were permitted to retire to their respective Places of Residence, on their Parole of Honour.

After the Surrender of the Saxons, their Incorporation with the Prussian Troops, as above related, and his Polish Majesty's Retreat to Warsaw, the Elector of Saxony fell under the Government of the King of Prussia, the Revenues are levied in his Name, and the Appointment for the Support of his Polish Majesty's Household settled at his Discretion.

It was apprehended, that the Prussian Army, being, by this desirable Event, fully at Liberty to act; and by so considerable an Acquisition of Strength, in a far better Condition to make head against the Enemy than before, would have penetrated into Bohemia, and given another Blow more fatal to the Austrians, under the Command of Marshal Brown, than that at Lowositz. But the King of Prussia, weighing the Disadvantages that might accrue to his Army by hazarding a Winter's Campaign, in a Country where the Severity of the Weather is generally more destructive than the most desperate Battle, against the Advantages that might be gained by a second Victory, at a Season when it was impossible to improve it, prudently resolved to withdraw his Troops into Places of Cantonment, and there wait the Motions of the Enemy. As this Step alarmed the Austrians, a Detachment of eight thousand Horse were immediately sent to penetrate the King's Design; who, according to their own Account fell upon the Rear of the Prussians, and killed five hundred Men; but the Prussians say, that it was not 'till their Army was distributed into Winter Quarters that this Body fell upon one of their detached Parties, who received them so warily, that they were quickly repulsed.

After the King of Prussia had put his Troops into Winter Quarters, and took every Precaution necessary to their Safety, he retired to Berlin, to consider more at Leisure the Measures necessary to be taken in this important Crisis; and soon after he published that famous Memorial which astonished all Europe, and set the dangerous Designs of the Courts of Vienna, Saxony, and Petersburgh, in their true Light. It appeared, from authentick Papers, that these Courts had agreed to provoke his Prussian Majesty to begin Hostilities, in order to fall upon him with their united Forces, strip him of his Dominions, and divide them amongst themselves.

After continuing some Time at Berlin, his Prussian Majesty returned to Dresden, and having ving heard great Encomiums of the Superintendent of the Lutherans in that City, as a Preacher, went one Day, accompanied by the Prince of Prussia, the Princes Henry and Ferdinand, Marshal Keith, and several other General Officers, to hear him. The Superintendent, though he knew nothing of his coming, adapted his Discourse to the Occasion, and, without entering into those Political Views which are foreign to the Pulpit, he considered the present Invasion and Situation of Saxony as the Consequence of the Almighty's Decrees, who, when he stretches out his Hand over the Nations, brings about the most unforeseen Events. He slightly passed over the singular Circumstance of the Two Monarchs at Peace with each other, one of whom entered the Territories of the other, who was thereby compelled to leave his Dominions. He besought the Almighty with the utmost Fervour to put an End to the Misfortunes of Saxony, by inclining the Hearts of the Two Princes to a perfect Re-union, that mutual Peace and Confidence might reign between their respective Subjects. Then turning to the King of Prussia, he recommended Saxony to his Royal Clemency and Goodness. He conjured him to take Compassion upon its deplorable State, by all those extraordinary Talents with which Heaven had so liberally endowed him, and which, he observed, were given to the few who possessed them, with no other Intent than to be employ'd in contributing to the Happiness of their Fellow-Creatures. His Sermon was so pathetic, as to draw Tears from the whole Audience; nor was his Prussian Majesty unmoved; and, when it was ended, sent for the Preacher, and told him, "Sir, your Discourse equally pleased and edified me; and I wish your Prayers may be heard."

While these Things were transacting in Saxony, the Russians were preparing for an early Campaign; and, notwithstanding the Severity of the Season, Troops marched from all Parts towards Courland, and the Frontiers of Pomerania. But notwithstanding these early Marches, they lingered above six Months on their Route, never approaching the Frontiers of Prussia, till after the unfortunate Battle of Collin, as we shall have Occasion to mention in its proper Place.

Transactions of the Year 1757.

Early in the Spring, his Majesty divided his Forces into three distinct Armies, one of which was commanded by the Prince of Bevern, another by Marshal Schwerin, and the third, which was the Principal, by the King in Person.

As soon as the Weather admitted the Troops to take the Field, he began to put in Execution the great Plan he had formed, of entering Bohemia with all those Armies suddenly, and at once, in order to surprize the Austrians before they were prepared, and either force them to engage engage at a manifest Disadvantage, or oblige them to retreat.

This Design, however, he contrived to conceal from the Enemy, even at the Time it was executing; by marching Part of his own Army towards Egra. From this Appearance the Austrians judged, that though he designed to enter Bohemia with the Armies commanded by Bevern and Schwerin; yet, that he did not propose to join them with his own. And seeing the Prussian Troops divided, they thought proper to send a considerable Detachment, commanded by General Aremberg, to oppose the Corps marching to Egra. This Event the King of Prussia foresaw, and therefore was prepared for it; so that by a sudden Motion to the Left, he cut off all Communication between Aremberg's Detachment and the main Body. The Austrians did not even then perceive the King's View, but exulted in an Event, which was the certain Forerunner of their Destruction. They mistook this Stroke of Policy for a Retreat, and gave out that the Prussians were fled.

In the mean Time, the March of the Prince of Bevern brought on an immediate Action, of which the following Particulars were soon after published.

Action of Reichenberg.

The Prince of Bevern having marched the twentieth at the Head of a Body of the Army which which was at Lusatia, from the Quarters of Cantonment near Zittau, possessed themselves immediately, without the Loss of a single Man, of the first Post of Bohemia, at Krotta and Gravenstein, drove away the Enemy the same Day from Kratzen, and marched towards Macehn-dorf, near Reichenberg. The same Morning Putkammer's Hussars, commanded by their Colonel, and by Major Schanfield, routed some hundreds of the Enemy's Cuirassiers, commanded by Prince Lichtenstein, who were posted before Kohlig, and took one Captain, two Subalterns, and above sixty Horse, Prisoners; the rest were entirely dispersed, and hardly able to rally near Kratzen. Night coming on, the Troops were obliged to remain in the open Air till Morning.

The 21st, at Break of Day, the Prussians marched in two Columns by Habendorf towards the Enemy's Army, posted near Reichenberg, commanded by General Count Königsegg, and consisting of 28,000 Men. As soon as the Lines were formed, the Prussians advanced towards the Enemy's Cavalry, which was ranged in three Lines, and consisted of about thirty Squadrons. The two Wings were sustained by the Infantry, posted among felled Trees and Intrenchments. They immediately cannonaded the Enemy's Cavalry, who received it bravely, having on their Right a Village, and on their Left a Wood, where they had intrenched themselves with felled Trees and Pits. But the Duke of Bevern having caused caused fifteen Squadrons of Dragoons of the second Line to advance, and at the same Time ordered the Wood on the Right to be attacked by the Battalions of the Grenadiers of Kahldeu and Mocllendorf, and by the Prince of Prussia's Regiment, who cleared all the felled Trees and the Intrenchments there, the Prussian Dragoons, who had by this Means their Flanks covered, entirely routed the Enemy's Cavalry. On this Occasion the Generals Norman, Katt, and the Prince of Wirtemberg signalized themselves.

Col. Putkammer and Major Schanfield with their Hussars, also distinguished themselves, by giving the Horse Grenadiers a very warm Reception; notwithstanding the Enemy's Artillery took them in Flank. At the same Time Lieutenant General Lestewitz, at the Head of the Prussian Left Wing, attacked the Redoubts that covered Reichenberg. The Regiment of Darmstadt, though there were many Defiles and rising Grounds to pass, all occupied by the Enemy, forced the Redoubt, and put to Flight and pursued the Enemy, after some Discharge of their Artillery and small Arms, from one Eminence to another, for the Distance of a Mile, as far as Rochlitz and Dorsfel. The Loss of the Austrians amounted to about 1000 killed and wounded; 20 Officers and 400 Soldiers were taken Prisoners. The Prussians also took three Standards, some Pieces of Cannon, and Ammunition Waggons. The Loss of the Prussians was about 100 Men, and one Sub-

Subaltern killed, and 16 Officers and 150 Men wounded. The Action began at about Half an Hour after Six o'Clock, and continued till Eleven.

This Success animated the Prussians with new Spirit: Marshal Schwerin, whose Army began to move on the 18th, marched with incredible Celerity, and by the 20th reached Königsbush on the Elbe. He had entered Bohemia in five different Places at once, and found the Inhabitants in the utmost Consternation, not having had the least Intelligence of his March, till he had passed the Frontiers. The Austrians immediately filled the dangerous Defile of Golden Ouse with Pandours, to dispute his Progress; but these were no sooner discovered than defeated. At Trautenau, two Austrian Generals, with the Princes Xavier and Charles of Saxony, narrowly escaped falling into his Hands. At Jung-Buntzlau, a considerable Magazine, consisting of 40000 Bushel of Oats, and above 2000 Barrels of Meal, was seized. The Austrians every where fled before him, and he joined the Prince of Bevern almost without Loss, making himself Master of the Circle of Buntzlau, and the adjacent Country, which submitted to these Armies without Opposition.

In the mean Time the King's Army moved along the Elbe, and having passed the Egra, advanced to Budin; from whence the Austrians, who had there a strong Camp, instantly retreated, and marched to Walvern, about half

half Way to Prague. The Prince of Anhalt Dessau, who commanded the Troops, that, as a Feint, had taken the Route of Egra, drew nearer to the King's Army; and on the 24th nothing but the main Stream of the Elbe separated the whole Prussian Force from that of the Austrians, so that a general Engagement became almost inevitable. The Prussians imagined that the Austrians would make their Stand on the Plains of Gitscher, and the Motions of Count Brown seeming to favour this Conjecture, the King passed the Moldaw with 50,000 Men, the rest of his Army remaining under the Command of the Prince of Dessau.

Battle of Prague.

The King having been informed that Marshal Brown had been reinforced by the Army of Moravia, by the Remains of the Corps which were beat by the Prince of Bevern, and by several Regiments of the Garrison of Prague, and seemed resolved to maintain the Post he had taken on the other Side of the Moldaw; his Majesty passed that River with Part of his Army, and being joined by that under the Command of Marshal Schwerin, determined to attack the Enemy, though much superior in Number of Troops, and posted besides in a Camp almost inaccessible, from every Advantage of Situation. All these Obstacles could not check the Ardour of the Prussian Officers and Soldiers, who vied with each other in in passing Defiles, crossing Marshes, seizing the rising Grounds, and clearing Ditches, till at length, after a very long and obstinate Engagement, and many signal Examples of Valour, the Enemy was forced to abandon the Field of Battle, leaving behind them the greatest Part of their Artillery, all their Tents, all their Baggage, and, in a Word, their whole Camp.

The Loss of the Austrians in this memorable Battle was very great. Part of the Left Wing of the Austrians fled in the greatest Confusion, and shut themselves up in Prague. On the other hand the Prussians, among several other Officers, lost the brave General Schwerin, who was killed in the first Attack.

The King of Prussia pursued these Advantages, and immediately invested the City of Prague. The rest of the Austrian Army retired into Moravia, where it was very greatly reinforced, and under the Command of Count Daun, marched back with an Intention of relieving Prague.

The Battle of Collin.

The Duke of Bevern having discovered that the real Design of Count Daun was to relieve Prague with the main Body of his Army, and that several false Attacks made by Nadaſſi were intended only as Artifices to conceal his real Design; he imparted his Discovery to the King, who was then before Prague. Upon which which his Majesty left the Camp, and at the Head of a few Battalions of Foot, and a few Squadrons of Horse, joined the Army under the Prince of Bevern.

Immediately after this Junction, the Prussians advanced towards the Enemy, who were intrenched near Collin, in a very advantageous Situation. The Infantry was ranged in three Lines upon a very steep Eminence, defended by Batteries and Defiles, which rendered it almost inaccessible; the Austrians were also greatly superior to the Prussians in Number. The latter, however, soon made themselves Masters of the two first Batteries, one of which consisted of eight, and the other of twelve Guns. After this they forced two Villages, which had been possessed by the Austrian Infantry, whom they drove out, and twice repulsed the Left Wing of their Army. There still remained another Post to force, which was defended by all the Austrian Artillery, and which it was impossible to approach without exposing the Troops to a terrible Fire, which was little less than devoting them to Destruction. The Officers and Soldiers were however willing to make the Attempt, but his Majesty would not suffer it; but commanded a Retreat, and the Army returned towards Niemburg, and without being pursued. The Hussars of Ziethen covered the Field of Battle, till all the Wounded were carried off. The Austrian Infantry did not venture half Way down the Mountain which they occupied, but still kept kept their Post, without advancing a Step. The first Battalion of Guards, and Prince Henry's own Regiment, performed Wonders; the Guards sustained the Fire of four Battalions, and two Squadrons for three Hours successively, though they suffered very much.

The Loss of this Battle the King attributed wholly to himself: One false Motion often proves decisive: The exposing the Infantry naked and uncovered to the Enemies whole Artillery, was an Error that could not be retrieved.

The Austrians were flying before his Majesty's victorious Troops; but the Chain and Grape Shot, which checked the Ardour of the Conquerors, made dreadful Havock among their Ranks; and having neither Artillery nor Horse to enable them to sustain the Shock, they were forced to retreat, not from the Enemy, who never dared to follow them, but from those Engines of Destruction, the murdering Fury of which they had no Means to resist, nor Numbers to supply.

The Loss of this Battle was succeeded by a still more affecting Misfortune; the Death of a Mother, whose maternal Tenderness was such, as rendered her unable to survive her Son's Defeat, gave an additional Stroke, which his Majesty was not prepared to receive. He, however, supported himself under this Affliction with a Dignity becoming a great Prince, who, notwithstanding this severe Trial of his Fortitude, Fortitude, appeared superior to his Misfortunes.

The Russians, who till now had moved unwillingly, and who for more than six Months had lingered on their March, all of a sudden quickened their Motions, and shewed they were in Earnest to accomplish the Ruin of Prussia. The Declaration his Majesty caused to be published on this Occasion, is full of Moderation, and of Sentiments becoming a great Prince: So important a Piece will admit of no Abridgment, and is therefore inserted here at full Length.

It is sufficiently known, that the King of Prussia, after the Example of his glorious Ancestors, has, ever since his Accession to the Crown, laid it down as a Maxim, to seek the Friendship of the Imperial Court of Russia, and cultivate it by every Method. His Prussian Majesty hath had the Satisfaction to live, for several successive Years, in the strictest Harmony with the reigning Empress; and this happy Union would be still subsisting, if evil-minded Potentates had not broke it by their secret Machinations, and carried Things to such a Height, that the Ministers on both Sides have been recalled, and the Correspondence broken off.

However melancholy these Circumstances might be for the King, his Majesty was nevertheless most attentive to prevent any Thing that might increase the Alienation of the Russian Court. He hath been particularly careful, ful, during the Disturbances of the War that now unhappily rages, to avoid whatever might involve him in a Difference with that Court, notwithstanding the great Grievances he hath to alledge against it, and that it was publickly known, the Court of Vienna had at last drawn that of Russia into its destructive Views, and made it serve as an Instrument for favouring the Schemes of Austria.

His Majesty hath given the whole World incontestable Proofs, that he was under an indispensable Necessity of having Recourse to the Measures he hath taken against the Courts of Vienna and Saxony, who forced him by their Conduct to take up Arms for his Defence, yet, even since Things have been brought to this Extremity, the King hath offered to lay down his Arms, if proper Securities should be granted to him.

His Majesty hath not neglected to expose the Artifices, by which the Imperial Court of Russia hath been drawn into Measures so opposite to the Empress's Sentiments, and which would excite the utmost Indignation of that great Princess, if the Truth could be placed before her without Disguise. The King did more; he suggested to her Imperial Majesty sufficient Means either to excuse her taking no Part in the present War, or to avoid upon the justest Grounds, the Execution of those Engagements which the Court of Vienna claimed by a manifest Abuse of Obligations, which they they employed to palliate their unlawful Views.

It wholly depended upon the Empress of Russia to extinguish the Flames of the War without unsheathing the Sword, by pursuing the Measures suggested by the King. This Conduct would have immortalized her Reign throughout all Europe. It would have gained her more lasting Glory, than can be acquired by the greatest Triumphs.

The King finds with Regret, that all his Precaution and Care to maintain Peace with the Russian Empire are fruitless, and that the Intrigues of his Enemies have prevailed. His Majesty sees all the Considerations of Friendship and good Neighbourhood set aside by the Imperial Court of Russia, as well as the Observance of its Engagements with his Majesty. He sees that Court marching its Troops through the Territories of a foreign Power, against the Inclination of that Power, and contrary to the Tenor of Treaties, in order to attack the King in his Dominions, and thus taking Part in a War, in which his Enemies has involved the Russian Empire.

In such Circumstances, the King hath no other Part to take, but to employ the Power which God hath entrusted to him, in defending himself, protecting his Subjects, and repelling every unjust Attack.

His Majesty will never lose Sight of the Rules which are observed, even in the Midst of War, among civilized Nations. But, if contrary contrary to all Hope and Expectation, these Rules should be violated by the Troops of Russia; if they commit in the King's Territories, Disorders and Excesses disallowed by the Laws of Arms, his Majesty must not be blamed if he makes Reprisals in Saxony, and if, instead of that good Order and rigorous Discipline which have hitherto been observed by his Army, avoiding all Sorts of Violence, he finds himself forced, contrary to his Inclination, to suffer the Provinces and Subjects of Saxony to be treated in the same Manner as his own Territories shall be treated.

As to the rest, the King will soon publish to the whole World the Futility of the Reasons alledged by the Imperial Court of Russia to justify its Aggression: And as his Majesty is forced upon making his Defence, he has Room to hope with Confidence, that the Lord of Hosts will bless his righteous Arms, that he will disappoint the unjust Enterprizes of his Enemies, and grant him his powerful Assistance to enable him to make Head against them.

To this Declaration no Reply has appeared: Hostilities, however, commenced on the Part of Russia, by attacking Memel, a Town situated on the Frontiers of Prussia, and which, after a short Resistance, was obliged to capitulate; but committed such unheard of Cruelty and Brutalities as shock human Nature, and will fix an eternal Mark of Infamy on an Enemy, who call themselves Christians, and who promised nothing but Moderation and good Discipline in the Memorials they have published.

In the mean time several small Skirmishes happened between the Prussian and Austrian Armies, but without any Thing of Consequence attending them, except the taking of Zittau, which was attended with many uncommon Circumstances of Cruelty on one Side, and Distress on the other; Zittau was a Saxon trading Town, which the Prussians had taken Possession of, and laid up in it some military Stores and Provisions for the Use of the Army. The Austrians, however, when they came before it, paid no Regard to the Inhabitants, as being Friends and Allies, but began to throw Bombs and red hot Balls into it, with so little Intermiſſion, that it was soon set on Fire in many Places. In the Confuſion which the Conflagration produced, the Austrians entered the Town, and the Inhabitants imagined they had then nothing more to fear, and that their Friends the Austrians would aſſiſt them to extinguiſh the Flames, and ſave the Place; but this Imagination, however reaſonable, was diſappointed; the Pandours and Sclavonians, who ruſhed in with the regular Troops, made no Diſtinction between the Prussians and Inhabitants of Zittau; inſtead of aſſiſting to quench the Flames, they began to plunder the Warehouſes, which the Fire had not reached, ſo that all the valuable Goods they contained, eſpecially Linens, were were either carried off or reduced to Ashes : The Mothers, Wives, and Children of the Merchants, were killed as they were sitting in their Chambers and Nurseries, by the Bombs which fell through the Roofs of the Houses. Six hundred and twenty-three Dwellings, besides Warehouses, were burnt to the Ground ; the Stadthouse also, with all the public Buildings, were destroyed, except the Cathedral, which was so much damaged, that it is every Moment expected to fall. The Number of Persons of both Sexes that were killed in this Assault, amounted to above Four hundred, besides those who were buried under the Ruins, or bruised, burnt, or otherwise wounded by the bursting of the Bombs, and the falling of Houses.

By the Treaty of Versailles the French engaged to furnish the Empress Queen with a large Body of Troops, which were to enter Saxony on this Side, while the Austrians attacked the Prussian Army on the other. But this Army, which was furnished by the French, were stopped by the Duke of Cumberland at the Head of an Army of Observation ; and it was positively asserted, that his Royal Highness would be able to maintain his Ground between the Aller and the Elbe, till the Rigour of the Season should have put an End to the Campaign ; but that Hope was at once disappointed, and the Assertion proved to be false by a hasty Convention between the Duke and Marshal Richlieu, by which which the Campaign is now closed on this Side, and Marshal Richlieu, at Liberty either to advance with his whole Force into Saxony, in order to dislodge the Prussians from that Electorate, and carry the Flames of War into Silesia, and the other Dominions of Prussia. Before the Conclusion of this Convention, which has opened the Enemy a free Passage into Germany, the Ravages of the Russian Cossacks, and other Barbarians in Polish Prussia, had rendered an Attack upon their main Army absolutely necessary. General Lehwald, who commanded a Body of 30,000 Men, finding it impossible to spare Detachments from so small a Number, to cover the Inhabitants from the Outrages committed upon them by these Savages, resolved to attack the Intrenchments of the Enemy, though at a Disadvantage so great as to leave but a bare Possibility of Success. The Account of the Engagement which happened on the 30th of August, as published in the Berlin and London Gazettes, is as follows :

That the Russian Army amounted to 80,000 Regular Troops, had chosen a most advantageous Camp near Norkitten. It was composed of four Lines, each of which was defended by an Intrenchment with a numerous Artillery, and Batteries placed upon all the Eminences. Notwithstanding so great a Superiority, Marshal Lehwald determined to attack the Enemy with his Army, which hardly consisted of 30,000 Men. The Attack began at Five in the Morning, and was carried on with so much Vigour, that the Prussians entirely broke the whole first Line of the Enemy, and forced all their Batteries.

The Prince of Holstein Gottorp, Brother to the King of Sweden, at the Head of a Regiment of Dragoons, routed the Enemy's Cavalry, and afterwards fell upon a Regiment of Grenadiers, which was cut to Pieces; but when the Prussians came to the second Intrenchment, Marshal Lehwald, seeing that he could not attempt to carry it without exposing his whole Army, took the Resolution to retire, which he did in the best Manner, and without the Enemy's daring to stir out of their Intrenchments to pursue them. The Prussians returned to their former Camp at Velau, where they remained; as did the Enemy in their Camp. The Loss of the Prussians did not exceed 2000, killed and wounded; which Loss however was immediately replaced by the disciplined Militia. The Loss of the Enemy must be near 14,000. General Lapuchin was wounded and taken Prisoner, with a Colonel of the Russian Artillery; but the former sent back on his Parole. The Prussian Army had, at first made themselves Masters of above 80 Pieces of Cannon, but were afterwards obliged to abandon them with 11 of their own, for Want of Carriages. The Prussians have lost no General or Officer of Distinction. Lieutenant General Dohna is the only one wounded.

It

It is said there are three Russian Generals killed.

The Account published by Field Marshal Apraxin, is conceived in general Terms. It represents the Attack as contrary to all the Rules of War, and as the Effects either of positive Orders, or of Despair. It acknowledges that the Prussian Forces behaved as well as Men could do; but it asserts, that they had 10,000 killed and wounded; whereas the Russians had but 7000.

While these unfavourable Events happened, the Armies of his Prussian Majesty were in continual Exercise. When the Austrians were approaching Lusatia, the King's Armies were drawn together to cover that Marquisate; but when his Majesty was assured of the Arrival of the French on the Confines of Saxony, aided by the Army of the Empire, and commanded by a Marshal of France, he hesitated not a Moment to quit Lusatia, in order, by giving Battle to this new Enemy, to keep the Seat of War at a Distance from his own Dominions. On the 15th of August, however, when he first formed this Resolution, and before he determined to put it in Execution, he went in Sight of the Austrian Camp, and within Cannon-shot. So soon as they perceived his Troops, they struck their Tents, and drew up in Order of Battle. The King formed his Army over-against them, and immediately went to reconnoitre the Ground between the Armies; but as it was then late, he deferred the more exact Examination of the Ground till next Day. The two Armies continued all Night under Arms. On the 6th, at Day-break, the King returned to reconnoitre the Situation of the Enemy with the utmost Exactness. He found them encamped with their Right at the River Neisse: The rest of their Army extended along a Height, to a Mountain covered with Wood, who protected their Left; before their Front, at the Foot of the Hill, on which they were drawn up, was a small Brook, passable only in three different Places, and that four or five Men a-breast. Towards the Left of the Austrian Army, there was an Opening, where three or four Battalions might have marched in Front; but behind it they had placed three Lines of Infantry; and, on a Hill, which flanked this Opening, within Musket-shot, were placed 4000 Foot, with forty or fifty Pieces of Cannon; so that really this was the strongest Part of their Camp. The King, to leave nothing undone that might force the Austrians to a Battle, sent General Winterfeld, with Part of the Army, to the other Side of the Neisse, by the Bridge of Hirschfeld, to try to take them in Flank: But that being likewise found impossible, the Prussian Army, after lying four Days before the Enemy, returned on the 20th to their Camp at Bernstedel: They were followed by some Hussars and Pandours; who, however, had not the Satisfaction to take one single Pack-horse in the Retreat. The Austrians say, they are 130,000 strong;

strong; yet they durst not risque a Battle, though the King gave them the fairest Occasions. The Day he returned to Bernstädel, after he had retired about 2000 Yards, he drew up the Army in a Line of Battle, and remained so upwards of an Hour: But not a Man stirred from the Austrian Camp.

On the 28th of August, after having refreshed his Army, he decamped suddenly from Bernstädel, leaving the Prince of Bevern, Prince Ferdinand, and General Winterfeld, with 30,000 Men near Gorlitz, to observe the Motions of the Enemy. He took the Road to Dresden, where, on the 29th, he rested with his Advanced Guard, and next Morning, at Four, continued his March, his main Body constantly occupying in the Evening the Camp the Advanced Guard had quitted the Morning before. On the 12th of September his whole Army halted for the Pontoons and Heavy Baggage, and on the 13th he passed the Sale, on which the Imperialists and French quitted their Camp at Erfurth, and retired towards Gotha, where they expected considerable Reinforcements.

In the mean Time the Austrians, who, before the King began his March, kept close within their Intrenchments, began again to shew themselves every where. On the 6th of September they took Possession of Barnstädel, which the Prussian Garrison had quitted, except one Battalion only, who were made Prisoners of War. On the 7th a sharp Engagement happened between the main Body of the Austrian Army, and General Winterfeldt; the Particulars whereof are thus related by the Prussians.

On the 7th a Body of 15,000 Austrians attacked two Battalions of Winterfeldt's Troops, who were posted on an Eminence on the other Side of the Neisse, near Hammersdorf, in the Neighbourhood of Goerlitz: They were repulsed several Times; but at last they took Possession of the Eminence, which they have since abandoned. The Enemy lost 3000 Men, and we had 800 killed or wounded; but what greatly heightens our Loss, is the Death of the brave General Winterfeldt, who received a Shot from a Cannon as he was leading up Succours to the Battalions which were engaged, and died the Night following.

The Death of this great General is an irreparable Loss to the Prussians, as he was equally remarkable for his Courage and Conduct. His Prussian Majesty received, at the same Time, the News of the Death of General Winterfeldt, and that the Swedes had begun Hostilities in Pomerania; to which this magnanimous Prince answered, with Tears standing in his Eyes, "I may find Resources against the Multitude of my Enemies; but how few Men are equal to Winterfeldt."

On the 13th of September his Majesty entered Erfurth, and from thence proceeded to Gotha, the Imperialists and French retiring before him, after having dismounted the Cannon, and broken the Carriages. Here he continued tinued all Night, and the next Day returned to his Camp at KirkSchlaben, near Erfurth, having left his Dragoons and Hussars behind him, under the Command of General Seydelitz, between whom, and a considerable Part of the Combined Army, a Rencontre happened on the 19th of which the following Particulars must not be omitted.

The Combined Army was assembled near Ersenach, and intrenched in the Defiles of the Mountains to wait the Attack of the Prussians, who still continued near Erfurth; but in the mean Time the Commander came to a Resolution of making an Attempt to carry off Seydelitz's Party at Gotha, which consisted of about 1200 Men; for this Purpose they marched all Night with almost all their Cavalry, and 23 Companies of Grenadiers, amounting in the Whole to between 7 and 8000 Men, and arrived about Eight in the Morning; but Seydelitz, though surprized, made a good Retreat, not losing 20 Men. The Princes Hilburghausen and Soubise, and all the French Generals, came up to Court at Eleven o'Clock; the Infantry possessed themselves of the Town, and it was expected they would have remained there: But Seydelitz perceiving a Fog to arise, determined to improve it; he therefore retired behind the Hills about a League off, towards Erfurth, where he caused 100 Dragoons to dismount, to represent Infantry, and divided the rest of the Troops into 22 small Bodies, which extended themselves very far, and, by the Pavour of the Fog, appeared like so many Squadrons. At One in the Afternoon he attacked the French with his Hussars only; and News was immediately carried to the French Generals, that the whole Prussian Army was advancing; that they lay behind the Hills, and that they were extending towards the Left, in order to surround them; whereupon they made all possible Haste to retreat, and after having marched all Night, were obliged to return the Way they came, without having any Refreshment; so that in two Hours Time there was not a Frenchman left. M. de Seydelitz pursued them, made forty Prisoners, killed about the same Number, took a great deal of Baggage, and was very near taking several General Officers, who had staid too long in the Town. This Action, though of no great Consequence in itself, does great Honour to the General. The King, however, did not think proper to let him remain at Gotha any longer.

The 21st he returned to Erfurth, and the same Evening the Vanguard of the French Army again repossessed themselves of Gotha.

During these Transactions, the Russians, who had advanced as far as Wolau, and committed the most horrid Outrages on the poor Peasants, and other Inhabitants of the Country they invaded, made a sudden and precipitate Retreat back to Russia; they took the Road to Tilset, marching with such Expedition and Secrecy, that no Party dispatched after them was able to do any Thing more than pick

pick up the Sick and Wounded, who were left behind in the Road. The Fleet also returned to Cronstadt, and their Gallies retired under the Cannon of the Fortrels of Memel, after burning 70 Vessels, in which they used to carry their Provisions, and thrown a thousand Sacks of Flour into the Sea.

But to supply the Place of the Russians, the Swedes under the Command of Count Hamilton, entered Prussian Pomerania, in a hostile Manner, and published the following Declaration, to account for so unexpected and extraordinary a Measure.

“ His Majesty, the King of Sweden, in Quality of Guarantee of Westphalia, could not “ excuse himself from causing his Troops to “ enter the Prussian Division of the Dutchy of
 “ the Anterior Pomerania, being by such Guarantee obliged to be vigilant in the Support “ of the Constitutions of the Empire at this “ Time insulted ; to obtain Satisfaction as
 “ the States of the Empire, which have suffered Injury, have a just Right to expect,
 “ and to restore them to the Peace which “ has been infringed by the Treaty of Westphalia.”

In Answer to this, the King of Prussia, by an opposite Declaration, has proved, in a convincing Manner, that the Crown of Sweden could not, upon any legal Foundation, lay any Thing to his Charge, to make it appear that he had really disturbed the Peace of Westphalia ; and therefore his Majesty enjoins his Vassals, Magistrates, and Subjects of the Anterior Pomerania, as likewise the Receivers, publick Officers, and other Persons of Employment, to the Observance of their respective Duties towards their Sovereign, without any Regard to the Prohibitions enjoined them by Sweden; and this they are obliged to do under a Penalty to the Refractory of the most rigorous Indignation of their Sovereign, &c.

Amidst all these Difficulties which his Prussian Majesty is obliged to encounter on every Side, by the Multitude of his Enemies, he still supports that Magnanimity of Mind, which no Misfortunes seem able to destroy. Among many other Instances that might be given, we have selected the following Letter, written by that Monarch some Time after the unfortunate Battle of Colin.

Letter from the King of Prussia to Lord Marshal.

“ The Imperial Grenadiers are an admirable “ Corps; one hundred Companies defended a “ rising Ground that my best Infantry could
 “ not carry. Ferdinand, who commanded
 “ them, returned seven Times to the Charge,
 “ but to no Purpose. At the first he master’d
 “ a Battery, but could not hold it. The Ene“ my had the Advantage of a numerous and “ well served Artillery. It did Honour to Lich- “ tenstein, who had the Direction; the Prus- “ sian Artillery alone can dispute it with him.
 “ My

“ My Infantry were too few. All my Cavalry
 “ were present, and idle Spectators, except a “ bold Push by my Household Troops, and “ some Dragoons. Ferdinand attacked with“ out Powder : The Enemy, in Return, were “ not sparing of theirs. They had the Advan“ tage of a rising Ground of Intrenchments,
 “ and of a prodigious Artillery. Several of my “ Regiments were repulsed by their Musquetry.
 “ Henry performed Wonders. I tremble for “ my worthy Brothers : They are too brave :
 “ Fortune turned her Back on me this Day. I “ ought to have expected it : She’s a Female,
 “ and I am no Gallant. In Fact, I ought to “ have had more Infantry.—Success, my dear
 “ Lord, often occasions a destructive Confi“ dence. Twenty-four Battalions were not “ sufficient to dislodge sixty thousand Men from “ an advantageous Post. Another Time we “ will do better.—What say you of this League,
 “ that has only the Marquis of Brandenburg
 “ for its Object ? The great Elector would be “ surprized to see his Grandson at War with
 “ the Russians, the Austrians, almost all Ger“ many, and a hundred thousand French Aux-“ liaries.—I know not if it will be a Disgrace
 “ in me to submit, but I am sure there will be “ no Glory in vanquishing me.”

Such are the noble, the generous Sentiments of this great Prince ; he does not meanly endeavour to conceal his Defeat, or depreciate either the Courage or Conduct of the Enemy.
 Nor would his great and noble Soul suffer him to impute the Loss of the Battle to any other, when he was conscious it was owing to a Mistake of his own.

In the Course of these Memoirs, we have already given several Instances of the piercing Genius, and extensive Learning of this great Prince; but we presume the Reader will not be displeased to find we have also added the two following. The first of these, namely, an Essay on the Government of Brandenburg, was wrote sometime since; but the latter, an Ode on Death, very lately.

Of the ancient and modern Government of the Country of Brandenburg.

Before the Country of Brandenburg was converted to Christianity, it was governed by Druids, as was formerly all Germany. Under the Vandals, the Teutons, and the Suevi, their Princes were Generals appointed by the Nation; and were called Fistern, which signifies Commanders or Leaders. The Emperors, who subdued those Barbarians, established Governors over the Frontiers, who were named Margraves, to curb this warlike Nation, extremely jealous of her Liberty. There are so few Records remaining of those distant Ages, that to avoid mixing Fables with History, we shall confine ourselves to the Government of the Electorate, under the Princes of the House of Hohenzollern.

In the Year 1412, when the Burgraves of Norernberg were first established in the March,

the Nobility, who were become resty and intractable under the late Regencies, refused to yield them Homage: As they were supported in their Independence by the Dukes of Pomerania, they grew formidable to their Sovereign; the great Families were powerful, they armed their Subjects, and waged War with each other, robbing Travellers even on the Highways. Their Places of Retreat were strong Castles, surrounded with deep Ditches. Thus, these petty Tyrants having divided the Authority amongst them, ravaged the open Country with Impunity; and as there was no Government that could enforce the Execution of its Laws, an universal Disorder prevailed, and the Inhabitants were reduced to the utmost Misery. The great Families that arose in this State of Anarchy, were those of Kitzow, Pultitz, Bredow, Hotizendorff, Uchtenhagen, Torgow, Arnim, Rockow, and the Lords of Hohenstein; it is with these that the Elector Frederick I. had to deal.

Notwithstanding they were subdued by this Prince, yet they continued still Masters of the Government: They granted the Supplies, regulated the Imposts, fixed the Number of Troops, which were never raised but in Case of Necessity, and were paid by them; they were consulted also upon the Measures proper to be taken for the Defence of the Country; and it was by their Advice that the Laws were administered.

History furnishes us with more than one Instance of the Power of the States. The Elector Albert, in the Year 1472, the Achilles, owed a hundred thousand Florins; and to get clear of the Debt, he desired the States to charge themselves with the Payment of the Money. They consented, and laid an Excise on Beer, which they granted only for seven Years: They raised it afterwards, and from thence comes what is called the Landschaft, or the publick Bank.

Under the Elector Joachim I. 1530, the States laid a Duty on Mills, Farms, and Sheep-folds, in order to keep two hundred Horse in Pay, whom this Prince sent to assist the Emperor against the Infidels.

In the Elector Joachim II's Time, the Credit of the States was so great, that they redeemed some Bailiwicks, upon which that Prince had borrowed Money, on Condition neither he nor his Successors should ever after mortgage or sell them. He consulted them upon all Occasions, and promised not to undertake any Thing without their Consent. They even entered into a Correspondence with Charles V. and gave him to understand, that they did not approve the Elector should go to the Diet; and accordingly he did not undertake the Journey.

John Sigismund and George William in 1628, consulted the States in regard to the Succession of Fuliers and Berg. They nominated four Deputies, who followed the Court, as well to assist assist as Counsel, as to be employed in Negotiations, and for such other Purposes, as Circumstances might point out, in the Service of those Princes.

George William in 1631, consulted the States for the last Time, to know whether they approved that he should enter into an Alliance with the Suedes, by putting them in Possession of his strong Holds; or whether he should side with the Emperor. From that Time Schwartzenberg got such a powerful Ascendant over this weak Prince, that he absorbed the whole Authority of the Sovereign and of the States, and levied Taxes by his own Authority. Thus the States had no more left them, of that Power which they had never abused, than the Merit of a blind Submission to the Orders of the Court.

The Electors had no other Council than the States till the Reign of Joachim Frederick. This Prince established a Council composed of a Minister for the Administration of Justice, another for the Management of the Revenue, another for the Affairs of the Empire, and another who was Marshal of the Court; over all which presided a Stadtholder. From this Council all Decisions were issued out in the last Resort, all Orders civil and military, all Regulations concerning the Police; and it was they that drew up Instructions for the Ministers employed in foreign Courts.

When the Elector happened to be obliged, either by a Journey or by War, to leave his

Domi-

Dominions, this Council exercised the Functions of the Sovereignty : They gave Audience to foreign Ministers ; and had the same Power, in short, as that which a Regency is possessed of during the Minority of a Prince.

The Power of the prime Minister and of the Council was almost boundless ; Count Schwartzenberg, in particular, had increased his Authority under George William to such a Degree, that it seemed equal to that of the Mayors of the Place under the French Kings of the first Race. But the enormous Abuse he made of it, gave the Elector Frederick William a Dislike to all prime Ministers. We find by the Regulations made by this Prince in 1651, that each of the great Officers had his different Department, and that in every Province there were two Counsellors to regulate the Affairs belonging to that District.

Frederick William, in the Beginning of his Reign, resided at Koningberg in Prussia : He took Care to provide the Council, whom he left at Berlin, with ample Instructions relating to the Circumstances of that Time. The Troops received their Orders from the oldest Generals who happened to be in the Province ; and the Governors of fortified Towns received Orders directly from himself.

Upon the Death of the Chancellor Gortz, this Dignity was suppressed, and Baron Schwerin was made first President of the Council. The Departments were divided, so that whatever related to the Administration of the Laws, was carried carried to the Council of Justice, who had a President at their Head: The Jurisdiction of the Officers of the Court depended on the Governor of the Castle: The Revenue was administered by the Chamber of the Domains, which was subdivided into several Offices; of which Baron Meinders, and after him the Sieur de Jona, had the general Direction.

The Ecclesiastical Affairs were directed by a Consistory, composed partly of Priests, and partly of Laymen; besides the abovemention'd Colleges, the Chancery of the Fiefs determin'd all feudal Affairs.

Things continued almost on this Footing, during the Reign of Frederick I. 1688, with this Difference, that he let himself be governed entirely by his Ministers. Duncleman, who had been his Preceptor, became Master of the State; upon the Disgrace of that Minister, Count Wartenberg had the very same Influence over his Sovereign; and Kamke would in the like Manner have succeeded the great Chamberlain, if the King's Death had not put an End to his growing Power.

Frederick William II. in 1713, changed the whole Form of the State and Government; he limited the Power of the Ministers; and they, who had been Masters of his Father, became his Servants.

The Direction of foreign Affairs was committed to the Sieurs de Itzen and Kniphausen; these Ministers conferred with the Envoys, and held a Correspondence with the Prussian Ministers nisters in the different Courts of Europe; but they were particularly entrusted with the Affairs relating to the Empire, to the Boundaries of the State, and the Rights and Privileges of the Electoral Family. The Sieur Cocceius, Minister of State, had the general Direction of the Administration of Justice, and acted as Chancellor; Under him the Sieur de Arnim had the Department of Appeals, and of the Civil Justice of Prussia and Ravensberg; and the Sieur de Katsch was placed at the Head of the criminal Jurisdiction.

The Sieur de Prentz, great Marshal of the Court, was made President of the superior Consistory, and instructed with the Inspection of the Universities, charitable Foundations, Canonries, and the Affairs of the Jews.

The Revenue was the Part of the Government which had been most neglected; for which Reason the King made several Regulations, and established the great Directory in 1724. This College is divided into four Departments, and at the Head of each is a Minister of State. Prussia, Pomerania, and the New Marck, with the Post-Office, constituted the first Department, which was given to the Sieur de Grunow: The Electorate of Brandenburg, the Dutchy of Magdeburg, the Country of Rupin, and the Place of Secretary at War, formed the second Department, which was given to the Sieur de Kraut: The Territories on the Rhine and the Weser, with the Salt-pits, made the third Division, which was given to the Sieur de Grone; and the fourth had the Direction of the Principality of Halberstadt, the County of Mansfeldt, the Manufactures, the Stamp Office, and the Mint; this fell to the Sieur de Vireck.

The King united the Secretaryship at War with the Commission of the Revenues. Formerly these Colleges employed forty Advocates, for the Prosecution of the several Suits that arose in those Courts, at the same Time that they neglected the Business for which they were designed; but after their Re-union, they employed their Time entirely in the Service of the State.

Under these principal Departments, the King established in each Province a Court of Justice, and another of the Exchequer, subordinate to the Ministers. The Ministers for foreign Affairs, as well as those appointed for the Administration of Justice and of the Revenue, made their Reports every Day to the King, who pronounced final Judgment on the several Matters laid before him. During his whole Reign there was not the least Decree which was not signed with his own Hand, nor the least Instruction, of which he himself was not the Author.

He declared all the Fiefs allodial, on Condition of a certain yearly Rent, which the Proprietors paid to the State. He laid out four Millions five hundred thousand Crowns in the Re-establishment of Lithuania; six Millions in rebuilding several Towns in his own Dominions, in improving the City of Berlin, and founding the Town of Potsdam; besides purchasing Lands

Lands to the Value of five Millions, which he incorporated with his own Domains.

In a Word, it was Frederick William that gave an advantageous Form to the State, and settled the Government upon the Principles of Prudence and Wisdom.

A N O D E on D E A T H.

WHAT do I hear? sad Truth! a few short Years,

Or Days, or Moments (can it be?)

May bring the Point mark'd in the rolling Spheres,

That ends all Time to me.

Thou Sun, whose orient Charms I oft explore;

And wilt thou set, to rise no more?

Earth, now I feel thy Weight—the Skies,

The Universe itself, fly from my Sight;

And now, a Victim down the Stream of Night,

I'm driven to the Sacrifice.

Whilst living, I'm encompass'd round with

Death,

Walk by his Side, in his cold Arms I lie;

And with my Food, impoison'd by his Breath,

I daily gorge Mortality.

Ev'n

Ev'n jarring Elements conspire

To quench the feeble vital Fire :

Art brings her Aid (too oft the Art to kill)

And to expell one evil (fatal Skill !)

Admits a greater, more tyrannic Ill. }

This Idol proud, to whom my Soul divine,

Submissive bows, e'er long shall be

Reduc'd to Dust, and moulder in a Shrine ;

O mournful Destiny !

The livid Food of Worms ! dire, painful Thought !

To bear the Idea yet my Soul's untaught.

Ah ! whence thy Pride, O pamper'd Clay ?

Reflecting what To-morrow's Sun may bring,

How canst thou, foolish Mortal, transient Thing !

Thus sooth the Phantom of To-day ?

What, of this vital animating Breath,

That acts, that thinks, shall be the future
Lot ?

Say, shall th' illustrious Victim fall by Death ?

This Soul, that, in a single Thought,

Pursues all Nature through the Sky,

And knows the living God on High ?

The living God !—It cannot, will not be ;

My dying Soul revives at Thought of thee : }

Who knows thee once, knows to Eternity.

The Cloud dispell'd, see brighter Prospects rise !

Lo ! dawning Hope and Bliss divine !

What Streams of Pleasure meet my ravish'd Eyes !

And shall that Joy be mine ?

The

The Just alone will taste the promis'd Bliss,
But impious Souls shall head-long seek th' Abyss.

There languish out Eternity to come,
Where Heaven's relentless Vengeance reigns :

Or this, or that's my final Doom.

A Moment seals my Fate ; perchance the next,
A thousand Objects hold me fast—perplex'd,
I rend my Soul, intirely caught,
And, like a Tree torn from its Place of Birth,
Am tortur'd from this Mother-Earth.—

Grandeur's vain Phantoms, view'd with jealous Eye,

Ye chain my Soul that glad would upward fly,
And cause a thousand Deaths before I die.

! What do I see ? Astonishment ! Surprize !

Sure Death no more can slay, devour :
No Aim, nor Effort, Wish, nor Enterprize
That seems to own his Pow'r.

'Tis Error whispers,—Man shall never die—

Markind, attentive, gorge the fatal Lie ;
They hoard, acquire, accumulate,

Pursue Renown and the Field of Death ;
The Age-worn Dotard, plodding, yields his Breath,

At last to unexpected Fate.

Go, plow the Sea, disdain the raging Skies,

Nor Dread nor Rocks, nor red-hot Lightning hurl'd ;

Licentious Mortals, go, Shipwreck despise,

And share the Plunder of another World.

Dare all Things, till your Idol ye have caught :

By your Example I'll be taught.

Ah !

Ah ! are you dead ? Who would have thought,
To see you pant for Gold, project, implore,
That Time would come when ye shall be no more ?

Thou haughty Conqu'ror, who, with Fire and Sword,

Hast, wasting, mark'd thy bloody Way ;
The World, no doubt, shall still obey thy Word ;

A hundred Sceptres thou shalt sway.
Ambitious Duff ! escap'd from Nature's Void, What yields Ambition, when thy Hopes are cloy'd ?

To conquer, triumph, and to die,

Ah ! were so many Nations overcome,
To deck, with mutilated Crowns, the Tomb
Where putrid Bones should lie ?

Behold this Stage of Life ! the great, the wise,

By sportive Fortune round the Scene are led ;
Then mark their Exit ! my astonish'd Eyes
Scarce know the Living from the Dead.

No more the Sweets of Flora bring,
Which Flora wafts on Zephyr's Wing ;
Crown me with Myrtles in a Cypress Shade.

Ah ! in the very Instant of my Woe,

Ev'n whilst on Truth I gaze,
Relapsing Senses, will ye go,

Back to the winding Maze ?
What new Attraction ? Was it all a Dream ?

Is, then, the great, immortal Soul supreme ?

That Soul, which, if an Insect's Web but draw
To Pleasure's Altar, will obey its Law.

See

See Reason falling down the frantic Stream !
This peopled World is but the Stage
Of Folly : Fools of ev'ry Age
Misplay their Part.
Like Fish escap'd the Net, away we dart,
Wind with the Stream, by Danger till untaught,
And, in the very Net we shunn'd, are caught.

O Voltaire ! this perpetual Change,
What Reason comprehends ?
Inconstant Scene, Transition strange !
The Hour begun in Woe, in Rapture ends.
Within our Breasts, 'tis this successive Reign
Of Pleasure, with alternate Pain,
That, to the Coffin from our Birth,
Still constitutes our Happiness on Earth.

POSTSCRIPT.

SINCE these Sheets were printed, Advice has been received, that his Prussian Majesty had totally defeated the French and Imperial Armies, and the following Particulars published by Authority in the London Gazette.

Extract of a Letter from the Prussian Army upon the Unstrut in Thuringen, of the 7th of November 1757.

“ On the 24th of October, the King's Army happened to be divided in several Corps, some of them at the Distance of twenty Leagues asunder. Upon Advice that the Princes of Saxe-Hildburghausen and Soubise were marching up directly to Marshal Keith, who was then in Leipzig, with seven Battalions, the King resolved that the Army should join again ; which was executed the 27th of October. The whole Army remained at Leipzig the 28th and 29th ; and every Body thought that the Battle would be fought in the Plains of Lutzen. On the 30th, the King drew nigh that Place ; and, on the 31st, in going through Wassensels and Merseberg, 500 Men [of the Combined Army] were made Prisoners of War.

“ The

“ The Enemy had repass’d the Sala, and burnt down the Bridges at Weissensels, Merseburg, and Halle ; but they were soon repaired, and the whole Army having pass’d the River through these three Towns, joined again the 3^d of November, in the Evening, over-against the Enemy.

“ The King was going to engage them on the 4th, but deferred it ; and the whole Day was spent in a Cannonade, to which our Cavalry, being most advanced, were exposed, and by which the French killed them nine Men.

“ On the 5th Intelligence was brought, at Nine o’Clock in the Morning, that the Enemy was every where in Motion. We heard their Drums beating the March the whole Morning ; and we could very plainly perceive from our Camp, that their whole Infantry, which had drawn nearer upon the rising Ground over against us, was filing towards their Right. No certain Judgment, however, could yet be formed of the Enemy’s real Design ; and as they were in Want of Bread, it was thought probable, that they intended to repass the Unstrut : But it was soon perceived, that their several Motions were contradictory to each other. At the same Time that some of their Infantry was filing off towards their Right, a large Body of Cavalry marched towards their Left ; directing its March all along to the rising Grounds, with which our whole Camp, which lay in the Bottom, between the Villages of Rederow and Rosbach, was surrounded, within the Reach of large Cannon. Soon after, that Cavalry was seen to halt, and afterwards to fall back to the Right. Some of this Corps remained, however, whilst the rest was marching back. About Two in the Afternoon our Doubts were cleared up; and it plainly appeared, that the Enemy intended to attack us; and that their Disposition, were made with a View to surround us, and to open the Action by attacking us in the Rear. In case we had been defeated, the Corps, posted over against Rederow, was to have fallen upon our routed Troops, and to have prevented their retiring to Merseburg, the only Retreat which would then have been left us.

“ The King took the Resolution to march up to the Enemy, and to attack them.

“ His Majesty had determined to make the Attack with one Wing only; and the Disposition of the Enemy made it necessary that it should be the Left Wing. The very Instant the Battle was going to begin, his Majesty ordered the General who commanded the Right Wing, to decline it, to take a properer Position in consequence thereof; and, above all, to prevent our being surrounded. All the Cavalry of our Right Wing, except two or three Squadrons, had already marched to the Left, which was done at full Gallop; and being arrived at the Place assigned them, they formed over against that of the Enemy. Our Cavalry moved on immediately; the Enemy's advanced to meet them, and the Charge was very fierce, several Regiments of the French coming on with great Resolution. The Advantage, however, was entirely on our Side. The Enemy's Cavalry being routed, were pursued for a considerable Time, with great Spirit. But having afterwards reached an Eminence, which gave them an Opportunity of rallying, our Cavalry fell upon them afresh, and gave them so thorough a Defeat, that they betook themselves to Flight in the utmost Disorder. This happened at Four in the Afternoon. Whilst the Cavalry charged, our Infantry opened themselves. The Enemy cannonaded them very briskly during this Interval, and did some Execution; but our Artillery was not behind-hand with them. This Cannonade having continued on both Sides a full Quarter of an Hour, without the least Intermission, the Fire of the Infantry began. The Enemy could not stand it, nor resist the Valour of our Foot, who gallantly marched up to their Batteries. These Batteries were carried one after another, and the Enemy forced to give Way, which they did in great Confusion. As the Left Wing advanced, the Right changed its Position; and having soon met with a small rising Ground, they availed themselves of it, by planting sixteen Pieces of heavy Artillery on it. The Fire from thence was partly pointed at the Enemy's Right, to increase the Disorder there, and took their Left Wing in Front, which was excessively galled thereby. At Five the Victory was decided, cided, the Cannon ceased, and the Enemy fled on all Sides. They were pursued as long as there was any Light to distinguish them by; and, it may be said, that the Night alone was the Preservation of this Army, which was so formidable in the Morning. They took the Benefit of the Darknes to hurry on to Freybourg, and there to repass the Unstrut; which they did on the Morning of the 6th, after a whole Night's March. The King set out early in the Morning to pursue them with all his Cavalry, supported by four Battalions of Grenadiers; the whole Infantry following them in two Columns. The Enemy had passed the Unstrut and Freybourg, when we arrived on its Banks; and, as they had burnt the Bridge, it became necessary to make another; which, however, was soon done. The Cavalry passed first, but could not come up with the Enemy till Five in the Evening, upon the Hills of Eckersberg. It was too late to force them there; and the King therefore thought proper to canton his Army in the nearest Villages, and to be satisfied with the Success our Hussars had, in taking near 300 Baggage Waggons, and every Thing in them. This, so glorious a Victory, must be more agreeable to his Majesty than any one he has ever gained, as it was at the Price of so little Blood, our whole Loss not exceeding 500 in killed or wounded. - Among the former is General Meincke. His Royal Highness Prince Henry, and General Zeidlitz, are both slightly wounded.

If we consider the Disposition of both Armies, as to their Numbers, it must be acknowledged, that the Hand of Heaven has been on our Side. The Enemy boasted, that they were 70,000 strong. I believe they were not quite so many : But from the Ground which they covered, it may be inferred, that they were not less than 50,000 fighting Men. After the King had got together at Leipzig all the several Corps of his Army, he had thirty-three Battalions, and forty-three Squadrons, leaving a Garrison of five Battalions at Leipzig. He marched with the rest to Lützen; and having crossed the Sala at Weissenfels, Merseberg, and Halle, and left a Battalion in each of those Places, the whole Army, which joined after this Passage, on the 3d of November, over against the Enemy, consisted only of twenty-five Battalions and forty-four Squadrons. During the Battle, the Regiment of Winterfield covered the Baggage; so that the whole Weight of the Action fell upon the Cavalry, and twenty-three Battalions drawn up in two Lines; and even of this Infantry there were but six Battalions that had Recourse to the Fire of their Musquetry, viz. four Battalions of Grenadiers, and the Regiment of Old Brunswick, which did Wonders. That Regiment lost its Colonel, with about one hundred Men killed and wounded.

“ The Loss of the Enemy cannot be yet ascertained. It is supposed they left 3000 Men upon the Field of Battle. The Prisoners exceed ceed 4000 Men, and there is amongst them a great Number of Officers and Generals. We took fifty Pieces of Cannon, and a great many Standards and Colours. We have this Day taken four more Pieces of large Cannon, and made 4. or 500 Prisoners.

Extract of a Letter from an Officer in the Army of the Empire, dated from Erfurth, Nov. 7.

“ At One in the Morning, of the 30th past, we left our Quarters at Stossen, and received Orders to repair to Weissenfels: The Regiment of Varell marched through the City, and over the Bridge, and was cantoned at Petra; two Regiments, viz. those of Nassau and Deux Ponts, and Rechmen's of Bavaria, with two Companies of French Grenadiers remained at Weissenfels.

“ On the 31st, at Five in the Morning, the Prussians came and attacked the City; upon this the whole Army was ordered to assemble; but Prince Hilburghausen's Quarters being at half a League's Distance from the City, Prince George of d'Amstadt commanded in his Absence, and took every possible Method to make Resistance; but it was too late: They were obliged to retire, and that noble Bridge, which had cost above 100,000 Crowns, was burnt to secure our Retreat. The Prussian Artillery made a terrible Fire, whilst the two Regiments were passing the Bridge. The Regiment of Deux Ponts lost four Officers, and 100 private Men, upon this Occasion. The Captains Muncherode and Dames, with two Lieutenants, were among the former. The Loss of Rechman's Regiment amounted to 200 Men, of whom six were Officers. The whole Army continued before the Town, and the Felt Marshal in his Quarters at Bugerau. In the Night 300 of the Wurtzburg Imperial Regiment were detached to the Place where the Bridge had been, in order to observe the Enemy.

“ During the whole Night a Noise was heard in the City, occasioned by the Strokes of Mallets ; but it was not discovered till Break of Day, that two Houses had been turned into Batteries. As they were not yet finished, we easily dismounted them with our six Pieces of Cannon which were sent thither, and killed them four Soldiers and one Workman.

“ The 1st of November the Fire from the Artillery continued on both Sides till Ten o’Clock, when we began to march towards Merseburg ; the Baggage having gone before as far as Camburg, we were forced to lie on the Ground without Wood or Straw. In the mean while the French were reinforced by twenty Battalions and eighteen Squadrons, commanded by the Duc de Broglie.

“ The 3^d of November we put ourselves in a Posture to wait the Enemy : At One in the Afternoon we retreated a League towards Freybourg, where we halted ; at Five we were drawn up in Order of Battle ; and thus we advanced advanced slowly towards the Enemy all Night. We were posted in a Wood on the Right, where we covered ourselves by felling Trees; and Batteries were placed by the French on the two Eminences, at each End of the Wood. On the 4th we were in Presence of the Enemy, and cannonaded each other. The Enemy's Cavalry advanced, but were repulsed by ours, sustained by the Fire of our Artillery. The Enemy's Infantry then moved forwards in three Columns, but were also repulsed. On the 5th the Cannonading began very early in the Morning on both Sides. The Left Wing of the Enemy extended as far as Legen, and their Right to Schorta; and our Army was posted in the Wood at Waneroda. At Noon our Army, as well as the French, had Orders to form the Line of Battle, and to march out of the Entrenchments which we had made. We advanced towards the Enemy, keeping, however, to the Left. The Enemy made a Feint of retiring, on which we redoubled our Pace; but we soon found what Kind of Retreat they were making. In order to deceive us the more effectually, they had sent some Squadrons towards Merseburg; but the rest of their Army was drawn up behind an Eminence which concealed them from us. It must be confessed, that we fell compleatly into the Snare.

“ The first Line of the French and our Cavalry continued advancing; when, all on a sudden, our Right Wing received a terrible Fire from the Enemy, which we returned briskly;

but, as we had been obliged to advance in some Hurry, our Ranks were a little disordered, which made the Enemy's Fire fall the more heavily upon us. Our Cavalry fled the first upon a full Gallop, but our Artillery supported us some Time longer; at last the French fled likewise; and being then no longer able to resist the Enemy, the Rout became general.

"We have lost all our Baggage and Artillery, and at least 10,000 Men. We marched the whole Night, and passing the River at Freyberg, arrived at Eckartsberg at Six o'Clock in the Morning. At Two o'Clock in the Afternoon the Feldt Marshal and Prince George joined us. They had hardly set down to Dinner, but we perceived the Enemy at our Heels, who cannonaded us briskly; and as our Army was not got together, nothing was left for us but to retreat. Having again marched all Night, we arrived at last at Erfurth, where we now are in Want of every Thing, though we are rather better off than before. It is now eight Days since our Men have had Bread; they have lived upon Turnips and Radishes, which they dug out of the Earth."

Extract of a Letter from Leipzig, dated Nov. 9,

"It is unfortunately, but too certain, that the Combined Army has been totally defeated and dispersed. One Part of it has fled by Naumbourg, the other by Freyberg. The Prince of Dessau pursues the one, and the King in Person

Person the other. There have been brought to Merseburg about 5000 Prisoners, besides 300 Officers. They are confined in the Churches.

“The Army of the Empire has lost sixty-four Pieces of Cannon, with Kettle-Drums, Colours, and Standards, in great Number. General Revel, Brother to the Duc de Broglie, died Yesterday of his Wounds at Merseburg. This enormous Misfortune is attributed, solely, to the injudicious Dispositions of the two Commanders; and it is assured, that, for two Days, the Army had not had a Morsel of Bread. Three hundred Waggons, with the heavy Baggage of the French Army, and a great Number of Mules, were taken Yesterday at Eckersberg. Posterity will never believe, that, at most, 18,000 Prussians could ruin an Army of above 60,000 Men. Last Night 300 Waggons came hither, loaded with wounded French and Swiss, who are in great Distress for Want of a sufficient Number of Surgeons. This Day we are informed from Merseburg, that the Number of Prisoners amount already to 10,000. The Peasants of Gotha and Thuringe bring in Numbers of them, in Resentment of the bad Treatment they have met with from the French: They add further, that the Victors have taken, in all, 164 Pieces of Cannon. 'Tis not to be doubted, but that their whole Force will now fall upon Erfurth.”

While Things went on in this successful Manner in Germany, the Troops of his Prussian
Majesty

Majesty were closely pressed by the Austrians in Silesia. Schweidnitz, the only Town of Strength in that Dutchy, was vigorously besieged by a superior Force; and the little Army of Prince Bevern was cut off from its Relief by the main Body of the Army under Marshal Daun. His Majesty, sensible of the Danger, and firmly persuaded of the Fidelity of his Generals, and the Bravery of his Troops, and that they would defend themselves to the last Extremity, formed a Resolution of marching to their Assistance, with a considerable Part of his victorious Army; though, what is almost incredible to relate, Part of them had been assembled, but a few Days before, from Places more than an hundred Miles Distance. The Events that followed, are related from a Prussian Officer in Silesia, published in the London Gazette; by which it appears, that his Prussian Majesty had Reason to alter his Opinion with regard to the Fidelity of some of his Officers.

Extract of a Letter from a Prussian Officer in Silesia, dated December 2, 1757.

“ You already know that the Austrians have penetrated into Silesia, with superior Forces to those of the Prince of Bevern; that Prince, who was obliged to weaken his Army by the Detachments with which he augmented the neighbouring Garrisons, had no other Course to take, than to post himself in an advantageous
Camp

Camp before Breslau, and there wait for the Enemy. But instead of attacking him, they undertook the Siege of Schweidnitz with a Part of the Army, and the Troops of Bavaria and Wurtemberg. The Siege was pushed from the 27th of October, when it began with so much the more Vigour, as the Austrians carried it on by foreign Troops, the Preservation of whom they were not very anxious about; for which Reason it has cost them above 8000 Men.

“ On the 11th past they made a general Assault, but the Garrison made so vigorous a Resistance, that the Austrians lost a great Number of Men in it, and only carried two Redoubts, without making any considerable Breach in the Ramparts of the Town. The Generals, who commanded at Schweidnitz, judged it proper however to capitulate the next Day, and to give themselves up Prisoners of War, with the Garrison, which consisted of about 4000 Men. It must be acknowledged, that the Austrians found in this Place a great Quantity of Provisions, Ammunition, and Money.

“ The Garrison, who had seen the Capitulation with the greatest Discontent, and who had more than once offered to force their Way through the Besiegers, learned by Chance, while they were conducting them into Bohemia, the great Victory which the King had obtained near Rosbach; which News animated them so far, that the greatest Part forced the Escort, Escort, which was but weak, and escaping, joined his Majesty's Troops; so that the Austrians have scarce kept 200 Men of the Prisoners they made at Schweidnitz.

“ When this Place was taken, the Corps which had besieged it rejoined the main Army near Lissa, and the Enemy resolved to attack the Prince of Bevern without Delay, and before the King (who they knew was marching, and had passed Lusatia, in spite of the Corps under the Generals Marshal and Haddick) could come to his Assistance. It was on the 22d, at Nine o’Clock in the Morning, that the Austrians attacked the Prince of Bevern, with a Force three Times superior to his; a Superiority of which they themselves boasted in their Journals, and in all the Gazettes which copied them. General Nadaſti had even placed himself with a separate Body on our Right Wing. The Attack was not advantageous to the Austrians: Their Right Wing was entirely beat, and forced to retire towards New Marck. Lieutenant General Ziethen, who commanded our Left Wing, beat also the Corps under General Nadaſti; and the Enemy, who gave the Battle up for lost, thought only of a Retreat. But some Regiments in our Right having suffered greatly, the Duke of Bevern judged it fit to return to his Camp, and to pass the River Oder at Breslau the following Night. The Austrians, not seeing any thing to oppose them but that City, returned to the Field of Battle, which we had quitted, to their great Surprise.

Our

Our Loss is small; that of the Enemy on the contrary, according to the best Accounts, and by the intercepted Letters of their own Officers, amount in the whole to 20,000 Men.

“ On the 3d we remained behind Breslau.

“ On the 24th, at Four in the Morning, the Prince of Bevern, going to reconnoitre without Escort, and accompanied only by a Groom, was taken by an advanced Party of the Croats, a small Body of whom had passed the Oder under the Command of General Beck.

“ After we had in vain expected the Return of the Prince on the 24th, Lieutenant Kiau took the Command by virtue of his Seniority. Lieutenant General Lestwitz, whom the King had ordered to take the Command at Breslau, not being able to maintain himself in a Place so extensive, and so ill fortified, capitulated, on Condition that the Garrison and Wounded should have free Leave to march out, but should not act against the Empress Queen during the Course of this War.”

Having thus related the Events which happened in Silesia, we shall return to the Army headed by the King in Person; of which the following authentic Relation was published in the London Gazette.

“ After our Troops had pursued the Army of the Empire as far as Erfurth, and that of the French to Querfurth, it was resolved to march to the Relief of Schweidnitz, which was besieged by General Nadasti. The King set

set out from Leipsick on the 12th of November, with nineteen Battalions, and twenty-eight Squadrons. Whilst this Corps was marching towards Lusatia, Marshal-Keith got into Bohemia through the Defile of Pasberg. He took at Leumeritz a considerable Magazine which the Enemy had there, set Fire to the Bridge over the Elbe, and marched on towards Prague. We continued our March with great Diligence. Upon our coming to Grossenbairn we received the disagreeable News of the Surrender of Schweidnitz. General Marschal was easily drove out of Lusatia; and the Corps which the King commanded got on the 24th to Naumburg upon the Queiss. We heard there, that on the 22d there had been an Action between Marshal Daun and the Prince of Bevern; which, it was said, had ended to our Advantage; but the next Day it was known, that Bevern's Army had been forced in its Intrenchments, and had retired to the other Side of the Oder; and soon after, that the Town of Breslau had surrendered. We made forced Marches, and on the 28th got to Parchnitz near the Oder, where our Van-guard surprized a Detachment of 1100 Austrians, 50 of which were killed, and 150 made Prisoners. The Prince of Bevern's Army had crossed the Oder at Glogau, and joined us on the 2d of December. On the 3d the Troops rested, having been greatly fatigued with the toilsome Marches they had made. On the 4th we marched to Neuwarck, where we made 600 Prisoners, most of them Pandours or Hussars. We heard that Prince Charles had left Breslau with his Army; that he had advanced beyond the Lissa; that his Right Wing was covered by the Village of Nipern, and his Left by that of Glogau, with the Rivulet of Schweidnitz in his Rear. The Army marched on the 5th very early in the Morning; our Van-guard met the Enemy's near the Village of Born, consisting of two Regiments of Hussars, and the Saxon Dragoons, attacked them, drove them back to their own Camp, and took six Officers, and about 500 Prisoners. As soon as our Army had got to the high Ground, it was resolved to attack the Left of the Enemy. We extended ourselves to the Right, as far as the Rivulet of Schweidnitz. The Attack began in a Wood, where the Enemy had posted some Infantry, and which however we soon forced. The Enemy, who found themselves turned, were obliged to change their Position. They lost the Post that covered them, which put them under the Necessity of taking precipitately the first Posts that came in their Way, in order to prevent our raking their whole Army from one Wing to the other. They posted some Brigades of Foot on an Eminence that lay behind the Wood, which was attacked by our Right, and carried after an obstinate Resistance. The Enemy formed a new Line near the Village of Leuten, where they defended themselves with great Bravery, but where were forced them. Then the Cavalry of our Right charged that of the Enemy, and beat them, but were checked by the Enemy's Cannon firing upon them with Cartridge Shot. Our Cavalry, however, recovered themselves presently, fell upon the Enemy's Infantry, and made a great Number of Prisoners. During all these different Attacks, the Right of the Austrian Cavalry and Infantry came up. Our Left of Cavalry charged that of the Enemy, and broke them; after which the Regiment of Barcut took the Austrian Infantry, which was posted on an Eminence in the Rear, at the same Time that the Left of our Infantry attacked them in Front. The Whole of the Corps of the Enemy was entirely broke, and the King pursued them as far as Lissa. The Action began at One in the Afternoon, and ended at Four. If Day-light had lasted another Hour, their Defeat would still have been greater.

We

we

“ On the 6th we pursued the Imperialists as far as Breslau.

“ The 7th we invested the Town, and all the necessary Dispositions were made to besiege it. The same Day General Zitthen was detached with a large Body of Cavalry and Infantry in Pursuit of the Enemy. He soon after took above 3000 Waggons of their Baggage and Provisions, some Cannon, and a prodigious Number of Prisoners. We have taken in this Battle 291 Officers, among whom are the Lieutenant Generals Odonel and Nostitz, the Colonel

Colonel Count Broton, and others. The Number of Prisoners taken in the Battle, and in the Pursuit, amounted to 21,500 Men. We have besides taken 116 Pieces of Cannon, 57 Colours and Standards, and 4000 Waggons of Ammunition and Baggage. We reckon on our Side 500 killed, and 2300 wounded. We have not lost any General, except Major General Krokow, of the Dragoons, who was wounded and taken when our Cavalry was first repulsed. The Officers, and even the common Soldiers, behaved with Admiration in this Battle.

“On the 20th his Prussian Majesty summoned Breslau to surrender, which was accordingly done, and the Garrison, consisting of 14 General Officers, and 10,000 Men bearing Arms, besides near 4000 Sick and Wounded, were made Prisoners of War.”

The Campaign of 1758 was opened very early, of which the following is an authentic Account, as published at Berlin by Authority.

A Relation of the King of Prussia's Proceedings, from his entering Moravia, to the Raising the Siege of Olmutz.

AFTER the Taking of Schweidnitz, the King's Army was withdrawn from Landshut, and continued in the Neighbourhood of Franckenstein. Lieutenant-General Zeithen covered the Frontier of Landshut at Brannau, and General Fouqué closed the Line in the County of Glatz. Whilst the Enemy were deceived by these these Dispositions, the King's Army marched to Neifs, and from thence to Troppau in three Days. Marshal Keith took the Road to Jagern-dorf. On the 3d of May these two Columns entered the Plain of Olmütz, one by Sternberg, and the other by Gibau. General Fouqué set out from the County of Glatz, as soon as he perceived by the Enemy's Motions, that they also were preparing to march into Moravia. This General went to Neifs, and took under his Convoy the Artillery and warlike Stores that were requisite for besieging Olmütz. On the 12th he arrived at Gibau, without Molestation from the Enemy. Our Army of Observation immediately passed the Morava at Littau, where some Austrians were made Prisoners. On the 19th the King advanced towards Ollschau, and drove away a Body of the Enemy's Cavalry posted there, who retired beyond Prostnitz. Near that Town the Prince of Wurtemberg fixed his Camp, consisting of four Regiments of Dragoons, one of Hussars, and some Battalions of Fusiliers. On the 27th of May the Trenches were opened before Olmütz, on the Side of Tobitschau; and the other Side of the River, towards Dolein, was invested by a Regiment of Dragoons, two Battalions, and 500 Hussars. The King drove the Austrian and Saxon Cavalry, under General Ville, beyond Wischaru, and our Army took Possession of all the Posts proper for covering the Body of Troops that were to be employed in the Siege. The Margrave Charles occupied the Post of Neustadt, the Prince of

Anhalt-

Anbalt-Deſſau that of Littau, and the King took Poſt on the Eminences between Proſnitz and Olſſchau.

On the 10th of June General Putkammer arrived with a Convoy from Sileſia, without meeting with any Moleſtation on his March; but as this Convoy was not ſufficient to finiſh the Siege, Measures were taken to bring up another. Mean while the Van-guard of the Enemy arrived in Moravia; General Harſch, who commanded it, pitched his Camp on the riſing Grounds of Aller-Heiligen, oppoſite to Littau. Marſhal Dawn arrived with his Army at Gewicz, and almoſt at the ſame a Body of 5 or 6000 of the Enemy advanced to Proſnitz; which obliged Marſhal Keith to place Bareuth's Dragoons near Wiſternitz, and the Independent Companies at Biſtrovan and Holian. The Enemy's Deſign was to throw Succours into the Town; and in the Night of the 8th of June, they attacked a Battalion of Volunteers, whom they forced to retire. Bareuth's Regiment, who had been upon Horſeback the whole Night, thought that they might return into the Camp without waiting for the coming back of their Patrolls; but ſcarce had the Dragoons entered their Tents, when the Enemy forced their Main-guard, penetrated into the Camp, and ſent the Reinforcement into Olmütz: Even Bareuth's whole Regiment would have been ruined had not the Battalion of Nimchewſky ſeaſonably come to their Aſſiſtance. This Succeſs of the Auſtrians made them fond of nocturnal Expeditions:

ditions: Thrice they attacked the Regiment of Zeithen at Kosteletz, who always repulsed them with Loss. The Independent Battalions of Le Noble and Rapin were not so successful. They belonged to the Corps under the Margrave Charles, and were posted at Sternberg. They were to march to Bahrn, to cover the Convoy which arrived on the 10th, and were so very roughly handled by the Pandours, that they lost three small Pieces of Cannon, and near 400 Men. Mean while, considering the Succours that had been thrown into the Town, and the Enemy's Position at Prerau, it was absolutely necessary to straiten Olmütz still more on the other Side of the Morave. The Corps under the Margrave Charles marched thither, and took Post in such Manner, that its Right kept Possession of Commotau, and the Bridge there on the Morave, and the Left reached to the Bridge of Hollitz.

On the 24th Marshal Daun with his Army came down from the Hills, and encamped at Predlitz between Wischau and Prostnitz. A few Days after, this General received Advice, that we were bringing a large Convoy from Silesia. The Body of Forces which escorted this Convoy consisted of eight Battalions, and near 4000 recovered Sick, who were regimented for the Sake of Order in the March. The Whole set out for Troppau on the 25th. Marshal Daun thought it his Duty to avail himself of this Opportunity to compel the Prussians, without the Hazard of a Battle, to raise raise the Siege of Olmutz. For this End, he detached General Jahnus, who was at Muglitz, towards Babrn, and ordered a Detachment to march from Prerau to Stadt-Liebe, that the Convoy might be attacked on two Sides; and in order to deceive us, he drew near to our Army, placing his Right towards Kofetein, and his Left at a little Hill very near to Predlitz. However, this Motion deceived nobody; and the Safety of the Convoy being our principal Object, the King sent out General Ziethen with three Battalions, two Regiments of Horse, and 900 Hussars to meet it. The Convoy was attacked on the 28th before General Ziethen came up; but the Enemy were repulsed and routed, and lost three Pieces of Cannon, and some hundred Men. Marshal Daum having sent a considerable Reinforcement to the Troops he had before detached, the Convoy was again attacked on the 29th, between Bautsch and Domstadt. Four hundred Waggons, four Battalions, and about 1000 Troopers had scarce opened the March, and passed the Defiles of Domstadt, when the Enemy fell upon the Convoy with their whole Force, both on the Side of Babrn, and on that of Domstadt. The Head of the Convoy was cut off from the rest, and though General Ziethen did on this Occasion all that could be expected from a good Officer, he was obliged to abandon his Waggons, and retire to Troppau. The Head of the Convoy arrived at the Army on the 29th in the Evening. The Enemy took near 600 Prisoners, among among whom is General Putkammer. This unhappy Event obliged us to raise the Siege of Olmutz. Had the whole Convoy arrived safe, the Place could not have held out above a Fortnight, notwithstanding the gallant Defence of General Marshall, the Governor.

On the 18 of July the King, with his whole Army, took the Road to Bohemiu. Marshall Keith has brought away all his Artillery, excepting four Mortars, and one 24 Pounder, the Carriage of which was broke. This General marches by Littau to Muglitz and Tribau, the King marches by Konitz. The Van-guard under the Command of the Prince Anhalt Dessau, has seized at Leutomissel, an Austrian Magazine of Meal and Forage. The Generals Buccow and Laudon attended our Army on its March, but without approaching too near it.

Thus have we related the Events which happened in Germany since his Majesty first took the Field. Events greater than any History has recorded; and indeed such as the Evidence of History would not have rendered credible: It is therefore with Pleasure and Astonishment, that we relate them at the very Time when they take Place, and while they are too notorious to be denied.
